THE REAL.

WRITTEN FOR THE NEW YORK CLIPPER,
BY S. A. M.

If we could know the real lives
Of those who live behind the curtain—
How each one lives, how each one strives
For fortune, changing and uncertain,
Strange contrasts would we often find
Between the real and pretended,
So strangely are they interlined,
So curiously are they blended.

That wealthy count who yonder comes,
Around whom every virtue lingers,
Could count his virtues on his thumbs,
And all his dollars on his fingers;
His name is likewise all a myth—
You know he writes it "Monsa. Chivarri"—
His father's name is simply Smith,
And he was christened simply Harry.

You wouldn't think that bright-eyed girl
Who plays the blithe, light-hearted maiden,
And dashes back the truant curl
With snow-white fingers jewel-laden—
You wouldn't think that she, I say,
Could every trace of sorrow smother,
And hold grim famine's form at bay,
Now hovering o'er a feeble mother.

That actor with the big moustache,
Who plays the villain's part so truly,
Whose pleasure is to cut and slash,
And do all sorts of things unruly,
Is not considered any worse
By her who fainted at his calling,
And often faints when they rehearse,
Because he catches her when falling.

That brunette, whom they advertise
As "charming, dashing Signorina,"
Knows nothing of Italian skies,
Her native town is Morrisania;
And, furthermore, the story goes,
She's going to wed the "Turk magician,"
Mohammed Ahbou, from Cohoes—
He used to be a quack physician.

That weeping widow, "fat and fair
And forty," as some one has written,
With whom that chap with yellow hair
Must seem to be so deeply smitten,
Would weep for joy if it were so
That she were now a widow woman:
She married him ten years ago—
Don't judge her harshly, she is human.

And yet we need not seek the stage
To find how strangely the ideal
Of human life, in every age,
Has always blended with the real;
We all are actors in our day,
And only see with glimpse uncertain
The real, as it fades away
While death is letting fall the curtain.

ALI, THE WHITE ARAB;

OR,

THE CIRCUS GIRL'S LAST ACT.

A STORY OF HARMAN'S UNRIVALED TROUPE.

CHAPTER I.

A long, oval tent, half stable, half green-room of Harman's Circus; for it was a traveling circus, and not given to overload itself with superfluous baggage; badly lighted, strong smelling, the canvas brown with wear and old age, the grass underfoot beaten down by the hoofs of the horses, and trodden into the miry ground; an animated scene, with the riders, attendants and musicians scattered about; but strange and novel to me, standing there, while John Harman, first groom to my father, rested himself after the fatigues of the first part of the programme. He was sitting astride in his chair, with his thumbs caught in the arm-holes of his waistcoat, and his round, red face, alternately serious and merry, as he ran over his history of the last ten years. He left us to help his brother, who was always in the horsemanship line, in the management of the circus; but since then Tom Harman had died, and our old groom become the sole proprietor.

"I would be pleased to see the old place and the people to-night," he said, nodding at the curtain, which shut off the ring, and the crowded seats, where the spectators were awaiting the second part of the programme; "and he would be pleased to see Ali and Mamzelle there, poor Tom would. And to see her ride, too. Look at them, Mr. George. They look like a picture, don't they?"

He pointed to a white Arab horse, standing close behind me, with a girl lightly costumed upon its back. She looked up with a slight smile at Harman's remark, and then flushed and started visibly as our eyes met.

"Hullo, Mamzelle!" laughed Harman. "Did you fancy he was going to join us? and were you thinking what a pretty clown he would make?"

He rose from his chair, and, leaning against the horse's shoulder, looked up at the girl with a merry grimace. But she took no notice of him; there came no answering smile this time upon her face. It was a beautiful face, too, with delicate, regular features, and a warm, southern tint, dark as a Spaniard's; but it seemed haughty and cold as the flush and the smile died out, and her large eyes were fixed upon mine with a troubled look, as if I reminded her of some one whom she had seen before, and her thoughts were busy in recalling the past.

"Well, well, Mamzelle!" said Harman, as though she had answered his last question, "if you don't think he will do for a clown, we'll put him upon a horse, and he can go in for your line. He can ride a little. I taught him to ride almost before he could walk. Didn't I, Mr. George?" appealing to me. "And what is a mile or you looked upon old Thistledown that day, to be sure, and now you are a man and an officer, and will be marrying soon, no doubt, and having mites of your own."

The girl's lips moved when Harman said that I was an officer; but he turned away, without waiting for her to speak, and called out to the men at the other side of the tent. "Come, come, no hesitate there's room for one more. Bill," singling out one poor fellow who showed less alacrity than the others; "put down that can. Time's up, I tell you." But Bill, winking apologetically over the rim of the can, finished the beer before obeying the order: and Harman busied himself in examining the girth and trappings of the Arab.

"You may make your fortune to-night, Mamzelle," he said, glancing up at her. "There are a lot of swells in the front row. There goes the music. Are you all ready? Good!" and pushing aside the curtain, he led the horse a few steps into the ring.

It was the first night of the circus at Heistonleigh; and the words of the programme, "Cheval de la haute ecole 'Ali,' introduced by Mademoiselle Celestine Dupont," had probably perplexed more than a few of the rustics who were coming; but when the white Arab and his splendid rider appeared they applauded loudly. Their applause was louder by and by as the performance went on; they were not insensible to the girl's beauty and grace; for she rode wonderfully well, sitting as square as a die upon her saddle, with her rounded figure well displayed, swaying as the horse galloped and capered and danced, as easily as a well built carriage swings on its straps.

Mademoiselle "told" as Harman had expected she would; and, if she pleased the rustics, she created quite a sensation among the "swells in the front row." They were mostly officers; many of them cavalry-men, for both branches were quartered at Heistonleigh. Hitherto they had not been bored more than was proper at a country circus. They were quietly indifferent to the charms of the young lady who jumped through hoops and over banners lowered nearly on to the horse's back; and they had been altogether callous to the sublimity of a shipwrecked sailor saying his prayers on a "barebacked steed;" but here was a performance more to their taste; perfect grace in both horse and rider, such as they had not expected to see. It was they who applauded the most; it was they who led the recall when the performance was over. Harman was in ecstacies of delight. "I knew she would make a hit," he kept saying, rubbing his hands, as I could remember seeing him when our favorite colt came galloping down the course at Broughton Market half a length ahead of the rest for the town plate. And when the girl returned the second time into the tent, as the applause still continued, he led the horse again towards the curtain for the further recall.

"I am not going in again to-night," she said, shortly, jerking the reins out of his hand and checking the horse.

"But Mamzelle, listen."

"I don't care. They may pull the place down before I will go. Will you help me down?" she asked, putting out her hands.

"No! no! they want you again."

"Let them!" she replied, her dark eyes flashing like jewels as the light caught them. And, without waiting for his reply, she sprang recklessly from the horse's back.

Harman muttered something as the girl stood before him, with her face, slightly flushed from the exercise, thrown proudly back; and, shrugging his shoulders, went out into the ring. The applause increased for a minute as he appeared, and then died away. The music struck up again, and the next lot went in, comprising all those who remained in the tent.

Drawing the whip through her hand, the girl stood by the horse, fondling its soft nose, till one of the grooms approached to lead it away. Then, walking slowly, backwards and forwards, over the trodden grass, she waited till the man left the tent; and as soon as he had gone, she came towards me with her gliding step.

"Will you not go in for your second recall, Mademoiselle?" I asked. "No wonder they"——

"I did not choose to, Monsieur," she said, cutting me short; but speaking less imperiously than she had spoken to Harman. The flush had faded from her face and the defiant look with which she had looked at him had died out of her eyes; and, somehow, the girl who sprang off her horse five minutes before seemed changed into a woman. The same number of years, probably, had passed over our heads; but she seemed infinitely older than I from her manner; and she looked older, too, than her age, now that I saw her close as she pushed back the dark hair from her temples with her ungloved hand. My intended compliment, such as it was, vanished before her quick answer. So she came close to me—so close, that I could have put my hands upon her rounded shoulders, and said in a quiet, earnest voice, strangely different to the way she had spoken before, with a slight foreign accent, for the first time becoming noticeable:—

"How did you come to know Mr. Harman?"

"He was groom to my father when I was quite a little fellow."

"Where?"

"At home. At Waltonhill."

"Your name?"

I could no more help answering her questions than I could help looking into the depths of her great, dark eyes, that held me under their spell.

"George Fordyce."

"George," she repeated, as though she knew I was Fordyce before I spoke.

"Yes." But the girl hesitated; she did not move away, though she looked no longer up in my face. She was not satisfied; her motive, whatever it was, for asking these questions, was not answered. I saw her lips tremble, and the color every now and then flush over her brow. There was something more she wanted to know; but she was at a loss how to ask it. There might be some secret she feared to betray; pride, doubt, honor—who could tell what?—was struggling in her mind and she was silent. Rushing impetuously, as it were, to her succor, while I could feel the blood tingling in my ears, as she glanced up with timid, wistful eyes, as though she longed to speak and durst not, I blurted out in a thoughtless, eager manner:

"What is it? What do you want to ask about my family. Tell me, and trust me."

I was too candid, too bluff; in a diplomatic sense, I made a great mistake. But I was young, and not accustomed to fencing in my speech; and though I startled her, and trod so roughly upon her half willing confidence as to scatter it to the winds, she saw that I was sincere; but her timidity vanished as I spoke, and Mademoiselle Dupont was again as a stranger to me.

"I—I want to know nothing about your family. Why should I?" And she laughed a little at my brusqueness. "You reminded me of some one I have seen; that's all."

"Of the same name?" I asked, quickly, turning the tables unexpectedly upon her, so that the fierce look flashed momentarily into her eyes, till she laughed again.

"Pish! What a boy it is!" she said, moving away.

Then she turned round, and looked at me again, but there was a sad smile upon her lips. "I was a little curious, that was all. Don't think about it except to remember that I am grateful to you." And, before I could answer, with a slight bow she hurried out of the tent.

Perplexed by the girl's manner, and angry with myself, I loitered about the circus till the people left. Mademoiselle was an enigma: she had evidently seen better days than those spent with Harman's troupe; but who was she? what did she know about my family? I did not tell Harman that she had spoken to me; but I asked him about her, as we stood in the ring, when the performance was over. The circus and tent were behind us, both dark and shut up for the night; but the different vans in front were ablaze with light—all save one, which stood apart from the rest, an ugly, top heavy, black object in the bright moonlight, with only a dull, red glimmer shining through the blinds.

"That's her's," said Harman, pointing to it. "Bless you! she goes like a queen among us: always lives there, and never comes near the rest of the troupe at the public. I know little about her. She's as high spirited as a thoroughbred. They won't bear the curb, nor she either. But she rides well, and she draws; so I put up with her whims. One can't have everything, you know. True, she hasn't been always in this line, that's clear; but I don't know what she was before she came to me. Let me see. It's nearly three years ago. We were at Calford; and I was just leaving the tent, after looking at the horses and things, as I did a minute ago, when up she comes, all muddy and footsore, and asks me to help her. I had a lantern in my hand, and I turned its light upon her as she spoke; and her great black eyes and her pale face—it was paler then than it is now—soon made me take a fancy to her there and then. I got one of the women to lodge her for the night, and give her something to eat; and she has been with me ever since. With all her whims and high manners, I like the girl, and all the troupe like her; for she's mortal kind if any of them are in trouble. Maybe she has had some of that herself. I think she has; but she's very close, and I have never asked her. See! that's the little girl—Harry the clown's daughter—who waits upon her; and she teaches the little thing to read and write, and speak her own foreign language."

The child thus pointed out was coming down the steps of the van. She turned round when she reached the grass to say "Good night" again, before she ran off. And Mademoiselle, from the inside, answered "Good night;" and then came to watch the child. She closed the lower half of the door in a dreamy, unconscious manner, and, resting her arms upon it, leaned forward, looking up at the sky. She was still in her riding dress, and the moonlight fell full upon her as she stood there, with a weary look in her upturned face, and great, heavy tears, gathering slowly, and glistening down her cheeks.

"Eh! eh! Mamzelle," broke out Harman, speaking with more than his ordinary kindness. "Why, what's the matter? And after your success to-night, too."

The sound of his voice broke her dream, for she started up. Instead of answering, she bent her head and went quickly back into the van. And as the door closed behind her, the moonlight streamed coldly upon its hearse-like paint.

CHAPTER II.

From the depths of my arm-chair, and behind the smoke of his own cigar, Reginald Fordyce, captain in the 4th Dragoon Guards, was going to tell me a love story.

He and I were cousins; we had not met for some years—not since I was at school; and the moment he entered my rooms I was struck by the likeness between us. We were about the same height, with the same colored hair, and the same kind of features; altogether very much alike, though he wore a long mustache, and his face was tanned to a deep brown by an Indian sun, and he had a lazy, nonchalant, individual manner, none of which I had yet attained. In age, he was about six years my senior; and I knew but little about him, except that he used to go to my home for a month or so during the shooting-season, when I was at school. I heard a tale about his getting into difficulties a short time before he exchanged into his present regiment, which was then quartered in India. That was in the vacation, after I left school; he was staying with us just before he went; and I had not seen him since then, until that night, when he had walked into my rooms at the barracks. He was home on sick leave, and had come down to Heistonleigh, where his old regiment was quartered.

"Are you going to Mrs. Cheshunt's soiree to-night, George?" he had asked. "What is the attraction there? Winter, Ulsthorn, and all the other fellows are off."

"Good looks, youth, and money."

"Quite enough. Mrs. or Miss?"

"Two misses."

"Are you going?" he had then asked again.

"No; I am going somewhere else."

It was the last night of the circus, and Mademoiselle's benefit; and I was going there.

"Isn't there a circus down the town?" he had said, after a little pause. "I heard the fellows talking about it. Winter told me they were all hot about one of the girls, who was awfully pretty; but that you had cut them all out, for you had the entree behind the——I was going to say the scenes: well, behind the ring. It's Harman's circus I suppose.

So I guessed immediately that I was in for a lecture, and that my cousin had come to my rooms expressly for that purpose. But he was not Mademoiselle, with her dark eyes and beautiful face; and I felt neither inclined to listen, nor let him have it all his own way. He had no right, I thought, to come and bother himself and bore me, about matters that did not concern him. I was quite old enough to take care of myself. But then, on the other hand, a lecture from him had all the charms of a novelty; and I was a little curious to see what efficiency he had gained in his new line. And, as he seemed so intent upon relieving his conscience, I thought it would be unbecoming in me, his junior, to prevent him.

"Yes," I said, "it's Harman's circus. He has an awfully pretty rider there; so I am fortunate in having the entree behind the ring, as you call it."

But Reginald did not immediately break out into a lofty strain, as I half expected. When it came to the point, lecturing seemed to be distasteful to him. He allowed his cigar, apparently, to engross all his thoughts; and he pulled his long mustache abstractedly, till at last, when a thick cloud of smoke nearly hid his face, he said, quietly:—

"You think you are fortunate in having the entree behind the ring. Surely you have heard the proverb about a burned child fearing the fire. When I was a little older than you are now, I burned my fingers very badly in somewhat the same way. I have lived to feel the smart, so I don't want you to do the same. You understand, George?"

I was sobered directly. It was not a long lecture; but had there been any occasion for a lecture at all, it would have sufficed. By referring to himself he gave it a point, a much greater one, it may be, than he thought; for there were incidents in his past life that were known to me, though he was not aware of it.

Mixed up with the story of his difficulties was the story about a girl, who was generally kept quiet; and I, probably, should never have heard it but from the circumstance that I once took a letter to him into our garden at home. It was just before he exchanged and went to India; and he was hiding from his creditors until they could be pacified, and his difficulties smoothed over. As a matter of fact his debts were paid by an uncle; and, often and often, I had heard him and other members of the family wonder what made Reginald leave his old regiment and hurry out of England. I guessed at the time, I remember, that the letter I gave him had something to do with his going. It came in an envelope directed to my father, with a short note, in a woman's handwriting, but without any name, begging him to send it on to Reginald if he knew his address. I happened to be in the room when the letter was opened and I was bidden to take the letter to my cousin. After a short hunt, I found him in the garden lying lazily on the grass, smoking his meerschaum in the sunshine. He didn't look much like a man in difficulty, I thought, lolling there, humming fragments of tunes, with the blue smoke curling from his lips; and, body, if envied his careless nature, that could stand troubles so easily.

"Well, young 'un," he cried out, as I approached, "what's that?"

"Another bill, I suppose," I said.

"How came it here, then?"

"In a letter directed to the governor, asking him to send it on to you."

"Hand over, then;" and without rising, he took it from me.

I have never forgotten seeing him read that letter. I was not so very young, as things go. I had just left school; but it was the first time I saw a man overcome.

He evidently knew the handwriting; for he gave a low, pleased laugh, as he opened the envelope. At the first few lines I noticed that his limbs stiffened, and his face grew hard, though without moving. Then his hand dropped as if he had been stunned, but a great oath hissed out between his lips; and, unmindful of my presence, he sprang to his feet and paced up and down the grass, clenching his teeth, crushing the letter in his hand and calling out aloud "to God," that the man had lied. He left us that evening; and soon after I heard that he had gone to India.

I only knew but the barest outlines of that story, and those, not altogether correct. I learned from a friend of Reginald's, who was with him in his old regiment. When the crash came, my cousin managed, somehow, to secure a little money, which he sent to the girl, whoever she was. It never reached her. Consequent upon its loss, but unknown to him, followed poverty—almost starvation, and the girl fled. And the letter from her, written in her anger, was the letter I gave him when he was lolling in the sunshine in our quiet garden at home.

That was why his lecture carried such a point with it. He had bought his experience—"burned his fingers," as he had said, "and lived to feel the smart;" and, with men of the world like him, who could tell whether the pain was not still stinging?

"Yes, yes: I understand, Reginald," I said; "but I will give you my word that I have not burned my fingers at all."

"Good! I am glad of that," he rejoined, with a relieved air. I fancied from what I heard, you had been going it warmly."

The little clock on the mantel-shelf struck nine.

"Is that right?" he asked, glancing up at it. "I suppose you are going to the circus. Shall I be de trop? I should like to see Harman again."

When our coats were on, the candles blown out and the room lighted only by the fire, I said:—

"Did you ever find the writer of a letter I once brought you in our garden, Reginald?"

He turned round quickly and looked at me with astonishment.

"Was it you?" he said. "Yes; I remember. I was a little excited about it, wasn't I? What made you ask that question? Well! no; I have never found the writer. Come, are you ready?"

Though he spoke in a careless manner, as if it were a mere trifle, there was a hard ring in his voice that told me that his smart was still stinging.

CHAPTER III.

There were not many "swells in the front row" of the circus that night; the reserved seats were nearly empty; they had been arranged since the first performance by the addition of the second row; but all the back benches were crowded, though Mrs. Cheshunt's soiree had robbed Harman of his "swells," and Mademoiselle her greatest admirers.

Seeing a place where there was a great, vacant space in these two reserved rows, Reginald and I went to it, and took our seats exactly opposite the entrance of the ring from the inner tent.

"We are just in time, are we not?" he asked. "I see your fair rider appears at the commencement of the second part."

He was looking at the empty orchestra, and the people settling themselves on their seats, or he would have seen her by the curtain. I caught sight of her face for a minute, bending forward over the horse's head, and of Harman by her side, pointing us out.

I had hardly spoken to the girl since the first night. She had not lingered again in the tent, as she did then; a few words, or a bow, as she passed through her own van, was all the recompense I received for my nightly attendance. She had changed, somehow, since her arrival at Heistonleigh. She was more docile, as Harman termed it, and if we were speaking about a horse; and yet I fancied he would rather have had her wayward and impetuous, as before.

"I can't make out what's the matter with her," he said to me. "She seems upset and out of sorts. Perhaps she will be better when we leave here."

"Perhaps," I answered, and kept my own counsel; but it was not without a feeling of regret at the thought of her leaving with her secret untold, and the one way in which I felt I could help her barred against me. I had not gone to Mrs. Cheshunt's soiree, because that night would be my last chance of speaking to Mademoiselle. As Reginald was with me, I went into the ring; it had been by myself I should have gone straight into the inner tent. I was inwardly chafing at being tied to him, when an accident happened which gave me an excuse for leaving.

I had seen the girl waiting as usual behind the curtain; seen Harman talking to her, and pointing us out; but when the musicians returned and struck up, she was not forthcoming. The audience grew quietly at first; it was not till the men commenced the old tune for the second time that they began to show signs of impatience. The noise increased steadily, drowning the music, as the delay continued. There was a hitch somewhere; ten minutes had gone and Mademoiselle had not appeared.

"I'll go and see what's the matter," I said. "Will you come?"

"Not now. I'll come afterwards."

So, leaving him there, I quitted the ring and hastened round to the entrance of the inner tent.

"What are you waiting for?" I asked of the fellow who made way for me to pass.

"Something to do with that French girl," he answered gruffly, as I went in. The delay was over. Below the flaps and flanks of the horse the curtain fell behind it, and heard the impatient stamping of the people turn to applause at the sight of their favorite.

"She forgot something, I suppose," said one of the men in the tent, speaking to me; "for she went back to her van, and kept us all waiting."

That was all then—a mere trifle; but it had given me an excuse for leaving my friend Reginald, and I was glad it had occurred. I did not want him by my side when I spoke to Mademoiselle; and, by moving the curtain a little, I could watch her riding in the ring from where I stood. I had done so before. I had been in the tent every night when she came in after her performance. This time I intended to tell her I wanted to speak to her, and ask her to wait.

Peeping from behind the curtain, I saw my cousin in his seat exactly opposite. He was not looking at the girl. He was sitting there, with his arms folded and his head thrown back, taking no notice of her, but staring at the canvas covering straight in front of him. To any one who did not know him he might seem to be merely indifferent to what was going on; but to me the expression of his face never changed, though my remembrance of him as he read the letter in our garden at home. There was the same rigid hardness; it was sterner to-night than it was when he lay on the grass in the sunshine; less passionate, but more austere, more unrelenting; not a feature was altered or contorted; as he sat there he looked like a stone statue of himself, with living eyes, that shone with a cold, pitiless light.

A conviction flashed across me, and as a sudden noise in the night, startling the sleeper, rouses into instant life all his dormant senses, so half-forgotten words, descriptions, speeches, crowded into my mind with overwhelming proof, that the writer of the letter, the cause of my cousin's going to India, the girl that he had sought but never found, was before me. It was my likeness to him that I had recognized; it was about her he had hesitated to ask me. I saw her face, as she was borne past, with its haughty, fierce expression returned and all the passion of her nature blazing in her eyes; and, at the sight of it, I dropped the curtain and turned away.

Harman was standing in the ring. He had never done so before; but, as I paced the tent, wondering what to say to the girl, I heard his voice above me calling out to the men to be sharp. He had come in to fetch the wooden stage, up which the horse mounted nightly, and stood with its four hoofs close together upon the small, round summit.

"Ah, Mr. George," he said, as we met in the middle of the tent; "wasn't that Mr. Reginald with you? I hardly knew him at first. What makes him stop there?"

He looked tired and worried; and the tone of his voice was so irritable that I hardly noticed the strangeness of his question.

"What's the matter, Harman?" I asked. "Mademoiselle been putting you out? What made her so late? Everybody seems to have something the matter with them to-night."

"And a cursed deal too much some have," he answered sharply; "and that girl's one. When I've got you and Mr. Reginald come in, I'll tell you her, and point'd you out. I did it to cheer her a bit; but, bless me! instead of looking pleased, she turned awfully white, and those great eyes of her's flamed and flashed like red-hot coals. 'Why what's the row now?' I cry out, as she jumps off the horse. But, without a word, back she goes to her van, and keeps us all waiting, till I thought she wasn't coming at all. So I go and knock, but the door's fastened. 'Don't be in a hurry, I'll come directly,' she cries out; but I wait till she opens the door, and the first thing I see is a bottle on the table, and then one of her dra'ers open, with half the things turned out on the floor. 'Well,' she says coolly, seeing me there, 'couldn't you wait a minute?' 'No,' I say; 'they are nearly pulling the place down.' 'They will pull it down altogether soon,' she matters; 'and I wish they would, and bury him under it.' 'Bury who?' I ask. 'Never mind,' she says. 'If you want me to ride to-night, let me pass.' What was I to do," he added, turning round to me. "I couldn't make a fuss, and not let her go on; and it's her benefit-night, too. But what the devil she meant I don't know; only I wish Mr. Reginald wouldn't sit there, and I shall be mortal glad when she's safe back in her van; and that's the long and short of it."

"I will tell Reginald to come here," I said; and I went to the curtain to beckon to him across the ring.

There seemed little occasion for Harman's alarm. The horse was going through his tricks as quietly as ever, and the girl appeared to be a little sharper with the curb,—nothing more. She never looked at Reginald, who sat, as before, staring up at the canvas overhead, while the rest of the audience watched intently the movements of the horse and rider. Every thing was so much as usual that the scene, following Harman's story, was like waking up after a nightmare.

"Damnation! What is she doing now?" he exclaimed, pressing closer to me, so as to see better into the ring.

"Only a new trick," I replied. I thought he was overexcited. "She is bound to do something new on a benefit night."

It didn't look very dreadful. The performance with the stage was over; and, instead of letting the horse gallop round as usual, the girl was taking it straight across the ring, pulling it up when its head was almost over the low woodwork. It had a dashing effect and the audience applauded loudly.

"Yes, yes. But Ali won't understand it. Look! she is doing it again."

Yes, again; but she headed the horse straight for where Reginald was sitting. Its white body hid him from us as it crossed the ring in a few strides. I felt Harman pressing to pass me, as the girl crouched upon the saddle; and, in the second, instead of seeing her check the horse, I caught the gleam of the lash upon a spur driven deep into the animal's side. A loud shout of horror rang in my ears, simultaneously with a heavy crash, as Ali, rearing wildly, sprang forward over the low woodwork, and fell full upon Reginald in a white, struggling heap.

Amid cries and shrieks we dashed into the ring. I saw my cousin spring up, and people rushing away from the spot. Others followed us and crowded round excitedly, with great oaths and hoarse voices. But as we bent down, all the din seemed unheard. Among the broken and shattered benches was the light-robed figure of the girl, with upturned face and closed eyes, lying right under the body of the horse, with its great heavy shoulder crushing upon her bosom.

An hour afterwards I was seated upon the steps of the black painted van. Reginald had carried the girl there, and was now with her alone. The crowd, who followed him, had dwindled away when the doctor's report was known, though a few of them still remained, scattered about in small groups. It was not a night for loitering in the open air, but, despite the cold, three or four of the troupe lingered by the van. They were a scene for a painter as they stood in the moonlight, in their gay circus dresses, waiting there because their companion was dying, and maybe because their hearts were heavy for the wayward beauty. But there was quietness at last, broken only by the low voice of the doctor talking to Harman at the foot of the steps.

"Is there no hope, doctor?" I asked.

He shook his head. "She can't live many minutes more, poor girl!" he said. "She was fast sinking when I left her a quarter of an hour ago. I don't think she is in much pain; at least, not acute pain. All the injuries are internal, and the organs are too numbed to be very sensitive. It's very dreadful—very dreadful."

Involuntarily I put my hand upon his arm. "Hush!"

He looked at me eagerly. "Do you really think she meant to do it?" he asked, so low that I could hardly hear him. "She raved about it at first, but I paid no heed to that. It's awful to think of it, and she dying, too. I wish we could get a clergyman to see her; but it is too late now—too late. Besides, he isn't English, and, perhaps, she would not listen to him. Do you know what religion she holds?"

"No," said Harman. "I'm afraid, doctor, I and the troupe don't think as much about that as we ought."

The old gentleman made a kind reply, and moved away from us into the shadow of the tent; and through the thick mist, which rose into my eyes, and blurred my sight, I saw him stand there, with his bald head uncovered, and bent low upon his breast.

"George!" whispered a voice above me. "George!" Reginald was standing at the van-door, as I had seen the girl, six nights before, with her tears glistening in the moonlight. "Don't wait for me. I'll come to you soon: don't wait." He closed the door, but his voice told me that the girl was dead. And motioning to the doctor that the end had come, I hurried from the place.

CHAPTER IV.

It was a long watch that I kept for Reginald, sitting by my fire in the quiet barracks. My rooms were near the gate and I heard the men return from Mrs. Cheshunt's soiree, generally in large parties at first, following each other at short intervals; but as the night wore on, now one alone, now two together, came back; after them a few late stragglers from other places found their way; and it was long again after the last of these had passed my windows, before I recognized Reginald's voice calling to the sentry. I went out, and waited for him on the landing, to let him see that I had been watching for him. He came up the stairs with a slow, heavy step, till he saw me; then, muttering something about being very sorry to have kept me up, he passed into the room, wheeled the arm-chair round to the fire, and sat down.

I said a few words—how dreadfully hard and hackneyed they sounded!—I could not go, as a woman could, and kneel down by his side, and coax the tears, by a gentle caress, into his bloodshot, burning eyes; so I sat in silence till he chose to speak. There was one thing I could do. It wanted but four minutes to five; and, pretending to search for something on the mantle-shelf, I touched the stop in the side of the clock to prevent it striking. I thought the sound might jar upon his nerves. Eight hours before it had been the signal which warned us that it was time to go to the circus. I did not notice that he was watching me; and I sat down, hoping that he had not detected what I had done.

"Kindly meant, George," he said, however, with a slight smile; "and there are other kindnesses that I have heard of and that I shall not forget. She spoke to me about you, for—eh! you look surprised and perhaps think you have done nothing. It was like stopping that clock. From what she said, I know you have been as courteous to her as if you had met her in the position she ought to have held; and I feel it the more because it—it was to my wife."

"To your wife, Reginald?"

"To my wife," he repeated, turning full upon me. "Think of me what you like. I have been a fool and a coward; and now I have to bear the punishment." He spoke very bitterly in his grief and moved abruptly round again towards the fire. Then he asked, in a quieter voice, but still looking at the coals:—

"Did you see it?"

"Yes."

"All?"

"Yes."

"How it happened?" and I nodded.

He seemed to read my thoughts. "Does anybody else know that?"—He stopped abruptly; he could not bring himself to criminate his wife in formal words.

"Only Harman and the doctor, I fancy, Reginald." And as I spoke, he drew a long, shuddering breath and leaned back in his chair. A sharp spasm of pain passed over his face, as if he had been struck; and then he murmured, so low that I had to bend forward to catch the words:—

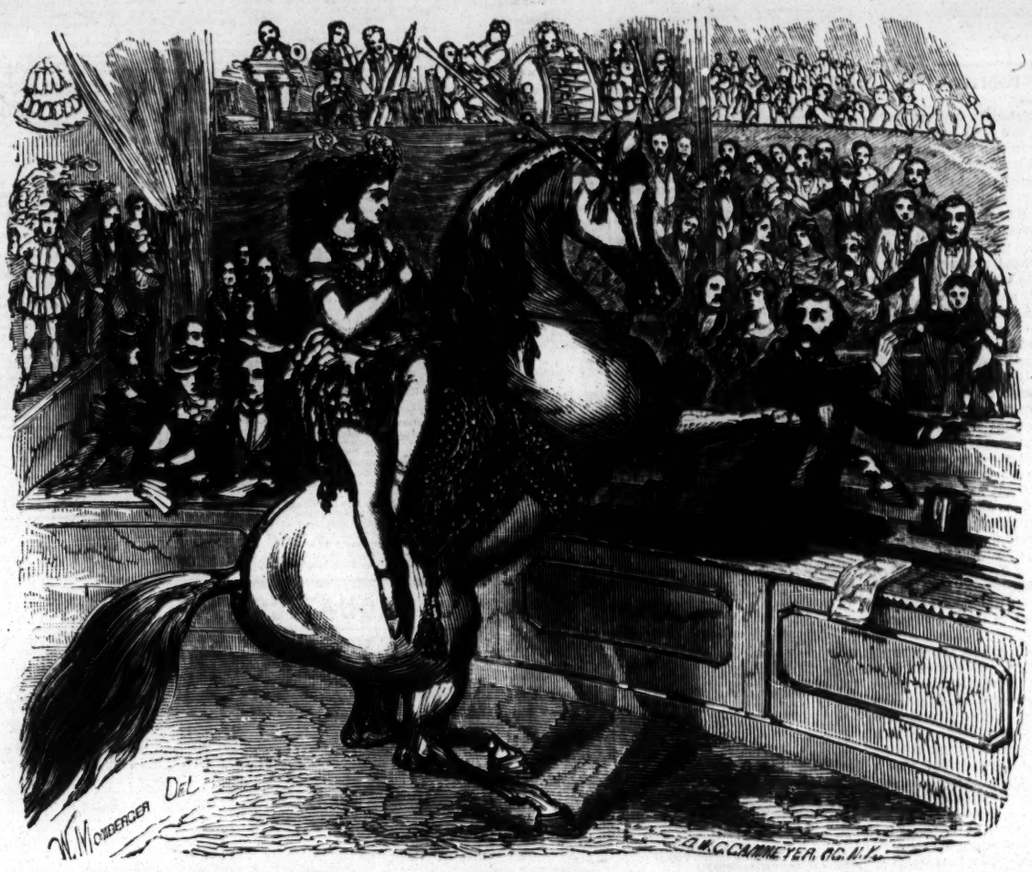
"It was my fault;—my fault. He told her that our marriage was a sham, and she believed him. He preyed upon her outraged feelings till he drove her wild; and then he tried to tempt her, and she fled from him. Baffled, he spread reports about her that were caught up and magnified. Men came to me, and told me tales about her. They meant well, no doubt. They did not know that she was my wife. I began to believe that the letter was a sham, and that it was only an excuse for her leaving me. I couldn't find her. I couldn't find him. I heard that she had gone off with him and I cursed them both; and now both are dead. He died with the lies he told to her, and about her, hot in his mouth; for they were lies—all lies; and this is the end of them. Oh God! and what an end!"

Kind nature came to his relief at last. His set, white features unbent, and great tears welled up into his dry, bloodshot eyes, as he covered his face with his hands. Without speaking, I put my arm around him and led him into my other room. I almost lifted him on to the bed, threw a rug over him, closed the door and left him alone.

It was an anxious week that followed the last night of the circus at Heistonleigh. Reginald went away the next day to avoid being present at the inquest; and, early the same morning, Harman sent the circus and troupe to another town. "Tell me nothing now," he said, "and I shall know nothing. It will be best for all." He and the doctor were summoned; but the newspapers befriended us; the jurors had no suspicion, and found, unanimously, that it was an accident, and poor Ali alone to blame.

"Best so, best so," muttered Harman. "It won't hurt him, poor brute! His hurts won't heal the less soon, or his corn taste less sweet. He'll have to be lithe and grow fat, now Mamzelle's left us. He'll miss her as much as any of us, although we were all very fond of the girl."

But before the week had passed there were placards posted up in another town, announcing the coming of the "unrivalled circus;" only La Haute Ecole was omitted from the programme. And far away from Heistonleigh, Reginald, Harman, and I stood by, while the fair rider was laid to rest under the shadow of the village church where she was married. It was her last wish to lie there. And a cross, bearing her true name, "Marie, the wife of Capt. Fordyce," throws its shadow, when the sun is setting, over her grave.



"ALI, THE WHITE ARAB." "She headed the horse straight for where Reginald was sitting."

NIL "DESPERANDUM."

WRITTEN FOR THE NEW YORK CLIPPER,
BY FRANK C. FILLEY.

This world is a medley of sorrows and joys,
And we are but children amused with its toys;
Like children our bubbles we blow with delight,
Never thinking they'll break, they're so transient and bright.
Then never despair, though your bubble should burst,
Keep a stiff upper lip and let fate do her worst.

When fortune is smiling, no friends you will lack,
But all will desert when the dame turns her back;
When the sun of your fortune shines pleasant and warm,
They will bask in its light—but they can't stand the storm;
But keep up your spirits, "don't give up the ship,"
Keep a brave, hopeful heart, and a stiff upper lip.

Should the girl of your love with the rest take her leave,
Cast her off with a smile, she is not worth your grief;
Her love and her vows were as false as the rest—
They were dross and not gold, and could not stand the test;
The world is all false when its gilding you strip—
'Tis the brave hearts that win and a stiff upper lip.

Then don't be despondent, whatever your luck,
Remember he's richest who has the most pluck;
Then all "desperandum," and take a fresh start—
There is no word like fail to a brave, honest heart;
Though friends may depart, fortune give you the slip,
Keep a brave, manly heart, and a stiff upper lip.

ACTORS AND ACTRESSES.

WRITTEN FOR THE NEW YORK CLIPPER,
BY H. A. DARLEY.

"Who are they? They are men and women who live upon the purse of the people who are foolish enough to patronize their immoral exhibitions. I have lived almost fifty years, and yet, in all that time, have never met with one whom I could shake by the hand with impunity, and call him or her 'my friend.'"

'Twas at a lecture in Brooklyn one night that I heard the above remarks, and spoken by one who was an old theatre goer; and yet he had the audacity to arise before that mass of people and deliberately falsify his very actions. I have known him to go behind the scenes when a spectacular piece was being played, and address the ladies of the ballet in language unbecoming the gentleman.

"Who are they?"

A well known minister, in the year 1849, published a book, and in it he speaks of actors and actresses in this way:—"Putting together in one class all actors, and people who cater for the public amusement, I pronounce them to be men who live off of society, and have no positive means of support." But in after years, when his publication had died out of the minds of the people, he has been heard to say that "were it not for the theatre our fellow beings would patronize the rum shops and become common drunkards," or words to that effect.

"What are they?"

A class of prejudicial people whom society flock to see, yet will not recognize them in their drawing-rooms. But they applaud their sentiments, and laugh at their witticisms.

To show the question up, I will relate an incident that occurred some five years ago, in Bleecker street, of a mother and her lovely daughter, both suffering the pangs of starvation in a strange city.

The mother, a woman of some thirty-five summers, upon whom traces of former beauty still lingered, had retired from the stage at the death of her husband—a man whose every action denoted the experienced actor; whose entrance upon the stage was, in the emotional play, the monitor of silence and attention; in the eccentric character, the incentive for laughter and merriment. But the fell destroyer laid his withering hand upon his brow, and he was called away to another world, to walk the golden streets of Heaven, and join in hymns of glory with the bright winged angels. His wife, his daughter, and the few friends he had made, followed him to his last resting place. His illness had exhausted the little fund laid aside, and the broken-hearted mother was compelled to sell their furniture and household utensils. She was too proud to live upon her neighbors, and with her lovely daughter she came to New York.

Soon their money gave out, and they were obliged to seek cheaper accommodations. Hoping to secure an engagement for her daughter, the mother visited all the metropolitan theatres; but it was nearing the summer season, and the managers "would be very happy to oblige, but as yet they had made no definite arrangements; call again in a few weeks;" and thus it continued until "hunger knocked at the heart for food, and was repulsed."

"Cheer up, mother, darling; heaven will not suffer us to live on in suspense much longer; we can only hope for the best, and trust in Him above to help us."

It was Lucy who spoke, and her words were comforting, for the mother drew her to her breast and kissed her once ruby lips, murmuring:—

"Thank heaven that I have such a child to console me in the hour of need!"

"But, mother, do you believe in dreams? I had such a pleasant one last evening; but when I awoke and knew the dread reality, so different to my dream, I never imagined poverty so hard. I fear, if I should tell you, it would make the burden of life more than you care to bear."

"No, Lucy, darling, anything to break this dull monotony. Nothing you will say can make existence more horrible."

"Then dry your eyes, mother, and listen to my dream;" and Lucy, wiping away the tears that would gush forth from her eyes of heavenly blue, continued:—

"I thought you left me to go to see the managers. While you were out I busied myself about the room, and tried to make all things have a more cheerful aspect. While I was thus engaged, the door opened and a young girl, with pale and emaciated features, entered, and bidding me don my outer garments and follow her, led the way into the street. The sun was shining brightly, and the little birds singing in the trees their merriest songs, opened to welcome the new life. We soon reached Broadway, and stopped before a large and handsome building. Taking me by the hand and bidding me have no fear, she opened the large oaken door and conducted me into a room wherein sat many ladies and gentlemen. When I entered they all arose and placed many parcels in my arms—so many, in fact, that I could not carry them. Then I awoke, and how I should get them home I heard the merry tinkle of bells, and turning around, beheld the fac-simile of Cinderella's chariot, only that it was drawn by reindeers. My conductress was about to place me in it, when a gentleman came forward, giving me a printed contract already signed. But you sigh, mother—does my story grieve you?"

"No, darling, the rivers of the heart will sometimes overflow. Is that all?"

"There is little more to say. I folded the document and thanked them all. So profuse was I that my eyes gave vent to my gladness, and I awoke; but if there is any belief in my dream we shall be placed in better circumstances."

"I hope so, Lucy, I hope so."

Rap! rap! rap! upon the door in quick succession. Lucy sprang from her mother's side, and opening the door, discovered a tall, well built gentleman, who bowed and entered the room. Taking off his hat, he said:—

"Madam, I have come to offer your daughter an engagement in ——— Theatre. Your husband was a very dear friend of mine, and I find it no more than my duty to all-viate the distress of his wife and daughter. I hope you will not deem me intrusive for——"

"Not in the least, sir," bro

INQUISITIVE.—The first successful power loom was invented by the Rev. Edmund Cartwright, an English clergyman, 1785-7, but the construction of this loom was unknown in the United States. In 1812 Mr. Francis C. Lowell, of Boston, determined to introduce the weaving of cotton cloth in this country, and to that end he entered with his brother-in-law, Mr. Patrick T. Jackson, set about the invention of a power loom, and, after numerous attempts, they produced a satisfactory model in the autumn of that year, and in the spring of 1813 started a factory at Waltham, Mass., which is still in operation.

"OWEN BROOKSWOOD."—1. Without wishing to discourage you, it may be well for us to state that there are many young ladies like who have had considerable experience on the stage of a respectable grade, good figure and pleasing voice go far toward ensuring managerial as well as public favor. 3. Those being prepared or instructed for the stage receive no compensation until their services can be made public. Personal application, in your case, may be more successful than advertising.

SALINE.—Cannot say. Write to secretary of Germantown Club.

A. B. C.—Two men are out, with man on third base. The striker tosses the ball to field; man on third starts home and the three just before ball gets to first base, putting out striker and side (the ball got to first base before the striker). Does the man who run in while the striker is knocked out score his run?.....The run does not, of course. See the rules.

OLD FOOL SELLER, Atlanta, Ga.—In the "Paris Mutual Pools" the tickets are $5 each, and you can buy one or fifty tickets on any horse you may fancy in the pool. This indicates that the above or many tickets are sold on each horse, for when a ticket is sold the operator moves a handle which registers the number. When the race is about to come off the sale of tickets is stopped, and the aggregate amount of money received, less commission, is divided among the holders of tickets on the winning horse.

FAIRNESS, Austin City, TEXAS.—In coursing, the merits of the dogs are judged by the "points" made in the race, viz.:—Speed, and endurance, go by the working powers, as evidenced by the wrench and the turn; trip or jerk, occurring when a dog in attempting to kill his hare, lays hold of her but loses her again; this scores half a point, and the kill.

PAT.—In a game of base ball the score on the 5th innings stood, O's, 11; F's, 11; the O's made 6 runs in the 6th innings, and the F's 9, with no hands out, when the umpire called the game on account of darkness. What should the score have been decided, 11-11 on the 5th, or 17-30 on the 6th F's?..... The score of the match is 17-30 on the sixth innings.

HOUSE, Cincinnati.—1. The Athletics are champions of 1872 until the winning of a decisive other game with them. 2. George Wright and Gould are in the Boston nine, and have been for two years past. 3. The club winning the most games flies the pennant for 1873.

UNITED STATES MARSHALL.—1. He has that power if so instructed, or appointed for that purpose. 2. An American born citizen, if registered, is entitled to his vote as soon as he is 21 years of age. If election day occurs on his birthday, his right to vote cannot be denied.

AUSTRALIAN.—The strength of each party seems to have centred on their respective candidates for the office of governor, and as Mr. Dix received a majority of the votes cast in this city, our opinion is that the state should be credited as having gone democratic.

KLIB, Tremont.—You lose your bet, for on the last race between Harry Bassett and Longfellow for the Saratoga Cup, Harry Bassett won. In their previous race for the Monmouth Cup at Long Branch, Longfellow won.

STAKEHOLDER.—1. Pennsylvania is entitled to only 26 members of congress, consequently A loses. 2. The same state has 29 electors, therefore A wins. 3. A person is not a congressman or elector until he is elected. 'Tis that that confers the title on him.

BANKER, Baltimore.—Should the dealer and the player on the left of the opposing partners can play it alone. Should three tricks be scored against him, his opponents count two points for the euchre.

WILL SYDNEY, Towanda, Pa.—"A says to B, 'I bet you twenty dollars the state gives five thousand majority for Hartranft.' The state gives about thirty thousand majority for him. Who is the winner, A or B?".....A win, of course.

TALK ABOUT POLITICS.

We don't know how you feel about it, dear reader, but the political situation gives us a great deal of uneasiness, and even disturbs our dreams in the noisy watches of the night. What troubles us is this: Both parties have all along felt confident of success in the approaching election, and assured the public that General Grant and Farmer Greeley would be elected by really overwhelming majorities; so long as this seemed to be the case, and so long as the managers made each man's coming and election sure, we felt perfectly satisfied, and were willing to let it go at that; but since the state elections held in Pennsylvania, Ohio and Indiana last week, there appears to be considerable trouble and dissatisfaction, and it is feared that fraud may be permitted to enter into the canvass, and prevent a fair and unbiassed expression of opinion at the polls in November, and thus disappoint the sanguine anticipations of those mutual friends who desire to see carried out the plan laid down to ensure the success of Messrs. Grant and Greeley. We have no personal interest in the matter whatever, except such as any good citizen may feel in the preservation and perpetuation of our republican institutions; but we do desire to see the predictions of the leaders of the two parties verified—only this, and nothing more. With Grant and Greeley in the White House, what have we to fear—what has the country to fear? Absolutely nothing; therefore, it behooves all well-meaning citizens to do what they can to bring victory to this ticket, and when the shades of evening shall close around them on the 5th of November, and the triumph of Gen. Grant and Farmer Greeley shall be proclaimed to all the world, their sleep will be all the sweeter in the knowledge that they aided in the consummation of the good work.

In our own city things are sadly mixed, and we touch the subject with extreme caution. We are said to be standing upon a volcano, which the slightest spark may touch off, and let loose its combustibles upon a metropolitan people. We are agitated, as it were, on the subject of the mayoralty and aldermanic boards; and, as in our national issue, efforts are making here, too, to bring about the success of all political combinations. This is well, and the movement shall receive, as it merits, our earnest support. But we likewise have our domestic difficulties, which entail upon us much patient suffering. We regret to notice that the various candidates for the mayoralty are already being sorely misrepresented; whether through ignorance or design, we are not prepared to say. But we find that Mrs. Susan B. Anthonyite extolled to the skies by her adherents, who in their love for that lady, and their desire for her triumph in the race for the mayor's position, give expression to assertions that cannot, by any possibility, be founded on fact; for instance, they maintain that she is a veritable sister of that ancient warrior, Mark Anthony, Esq. If so, why is this important fact kept from the public until the very eve of an election? There must be an error somewhere, or a great wrong has been done the public. Mr. Lawrence, another aspirant for the chief magistracy of the American metropolis, is charged with being the author of that soul-stirring sentiment, "Don't give up the ship." If Mr. Lawrence is the gallant sailor who gave utterance to that legend, who is there to oppose him? And Jimmy O'Brien is now credited with being the great O'Brien, "the exile of Erin," who was sentenced to be hung, drawn and quartered. If this be true, then nothing can prevent his triumph. We cannot pursue the subject further at present. Verily, our politics are in a sad muddle.

GOOD WILL.—The following advertisement appeared in the Herald one day last week:—

PHYSICIANS.—$1,500 CASH WILL PURCHASE $1,000 WORTH of household and office Furniture and Piano worth $600 and Good Will of an old physician. Address, etc.

We have twisted it over and over, read it forward and backward, had it paraded on a stereopticon, and magnified by a magic lantern, but it still puzzles us. Now, if for that $1,500, the purchaser gets $1,000 worth of furniture, and a $600 piano, of what value is the good will of that old physician?

AN IMPUDENT PERSON says that Manager Hart asserts that 20,000 persons visit his Theatre Comique weekly, and wants us to "inform him how he gets them in when the house will only hold about fifteen hundred!" This is one of the secrets of managers which we are not permitted to disclose. Persons often get hurt for asking less important questions than that.

IMPORTANT.—We are given to understand that the Civil Service rules providing for examination as to qualifications, will hereafter be extended to light house keepers. This is all very well as far as it goes, but more good may be accomplished if the uncivil service rules extend the examination so as to reach light boarding housekeepers in this city.

WHEN JIMMY O'BRIEN received the nomination for Mayor of New York, crowds flocked to the CLIPPER building to congratulate "Our Jim," supposing him to be the lucky individual. Jimmy at once undeceived his well-wishers by assuring them that, with all due deference to the O'Briens, his name is Jimmy O'Fadden.

COW KICK.—Chicago, which suffered so seriously one year ago from a kick at the hands of Mrs. Mallonev's cow's off foot, celebrated the anniversary of that important event in her history on the 9th inst., by rising, Phœnix like, from her ashes.

ANOTHER HOLIDAY.—President Grant has nominated Thursday, Nov. 28th, as a day of thanksgiving and praise. And yet foreign ingrates say that we are an ungrateful people.

NEWS OF THE WEEK BOILED DOWN.

☞ Advices from Puerto Cabello, Venezuela, state that the Cuban steamer Virginius was captured on Sept. 7th. The President of Venezuela ordered 350 soldiers into the fort, and informed the commander of the Spanish man-of-war Pizzaro and an iron-clad that, if he fired on the Virginius while flying the American colors in Venezuelan waters he (the President) would throw into the Spanish fleet. The pursuing vessels were not fleet enough to catch the Virginius, which ran out, blowing her whistle defiantly.

☞ The Grand Jury found indictments against Chief of Police McWilliams and Detective Doyle, of Jersey City, N. J., on Oct. 9th. The latter was at once arrested and held in $20,000 bail, but McWilliams could not then be found, though his friends say that he was simply keeping out of the way temporarily, to arrange his affairs. His bail was forfeited, but he afterwards put in an appearance, was arrested and locked up.

☞ Disapprobation of the award of the Geneva arbitration is expressed by the English conservatives. In a speech on Oct. 9th, Mr. Bentinck, M. P., pronounced the settlement "a dishonor to England," and said that she deserved for it the scorn of the whole world, and would cease to hold her position among the nations." Henry Jarvis, M. P., and others also made speeches in the same condemnatory vein.

☞ The elections for state officers in the states of Pennsylvania, Ohio and Indiana, were held on Oct. 8th. The result was a victory for the radical party in Pennsylvania, about 30,000; about 33,000, and in Ohio by about 10,000; in Indiana, the Democratic-Liberal candidates for governor and superintendent of public instruction, were elected by a small majority, but the balance of the successful candidates are Republican.

☞ The shopkeepers of Madrid, Spain, incensed at the imposition of a new tax on shop bills, gathered in the streets, insulted the members of the city government, who were trying to pacify them, and attacked the police with clubs and stones, seven persons being injured. A battalion of National Guards dispersed the mob.

☞ October 9th was the anniversary of the conflagration which nearly obliterated Chicago, and the occasion was made one of rejoicing over the city's recuperation from the sad disaster. The new chamber of commerce was opened, and many celebrated the day by removal to the rebuilt portion.

☞ A riot took place between the Turkish and Persian residents of Stamboul, Constantinople, on Oct. 9th. Troops were called out to suppress the disturbance, and fired among the Persians, killing three and wounding thirty, while ten soldiers were wounded in return.

☞ Thirty-seven stores and thirteen tenements—about one-half of the business portion of the town—were destroyed by fire at Ring King, N. Y., on the 9th inst. The fire is supposed to have been the work of an incendiary. Two persons were seriously injured, and the loss is estimated at $250,000.

☞ A fatal accident occurred on an express train on the railroad between Paducah and Elizabethtown, Ill., on Oct. 10th. The train was thrown down an embankment forty feet. Two persons were killed and a number of other passengers more or less injured.

☞ Prince Napoleon and his wife, the Princess Clotilde, were compelled to leave Paris and France on the 11th inst., by a peremptory order from the government. They had previously refused to leave in compliance with an official notice that they would not be allowed to reside upon French soil.

☞ Prince Napoleon not having complied with an order from the government to leave Paris, France, at noon on the 11th inst., he was, half an hour later, waited upon by the prefect of police, and two gendarmerie sergeants, who escorted him to the railroad, his wife, the Princess Clotilde, voluntarily accompanying him.

☞ While King Amadeus was walking in the Plaza del Oriente, Madrid, Spain, on the 7th inst., two men, who had been concealed behind statues, threw bombs at him, shouting "Viva la republica." Fortunately the king was not injured. The police pursued the miscreants, but they escaped.

☞ The Board of Trade of this city and vicinity celebrated their declaration of independence on Oct. 10th. One hundred guns were fired in city hall park, addresses were delivered and a banquet held.

☞ A collision occurred at Cincinnati, O., on the 7th inst., between a Greeley torch-light procession and colored men, during which several persons were seriously wounded. The whole police force was called out and the rioters dispersed.

THE RING.

FIGHT BETWEEN TOM KELLY AND FRED BUSEY.

Kelly Wins in 27 Rounds.

The match made on Sept. 11th between Tom Kelly and Fred Busey, to fight at 144lbs., within fifty miles of St. Louis, Mo., Tom Kelly to weigh $300 against $200 posted by Fred, was decided on Wednesday, Oct. 9th, at Carroll Island, a few miles below the Mound City, and the scene of several previous battles. Kelly is of Hibernian extraction, though England is the land of his birth, he having first seen the light at Bradford, in Yorkshire, in 1836. He has appeared in the ring as a principal seven times in England, having beaten Jack Connor, Dan Lomas, Bill Brown, Jack Rooke (a second fight), Jack Rooke and Dick Bowler; beaten (a cross, and all both declared off), and Dick Bowler; beaten by Jack Rooke and Harry Allen. He arrived in this country in the 15th of January, 1863, and has appeared as second in several battles here, and acted for O'Baldwin in his recent match with Mace. He has resided most of the time in St. Louis, where he keeps a saloon. Busey was born in New York State, and has appeared twice before in the orthodox circle, defeating Andy Duffy, and being beaten by Tom McAlpine, besides forfeiting $100 to the late Patsey Reardon. The stakeholder was Francis Fisher and barge was chartered for the occasion and left the Illinois shore, opposite Carr street, about ten o'clock on the morning of the 9th, with about one hundred and fifty persons on board. A ride of less than two hours brought the excursionists to the island, the principals having been taken on board en route, and at noon the ring was pitched. Tom Heathcock, the cook fancier and breeder, was appointed referee, John Clark officiated as umpire for Kelly and Frank Curry looked after Busey's interests. Tom, who was waited upon by Jack Looney and Patsey Curtin, sported a banner of emerald green; while Busey wore blue kerchief and had his required a Jack Maddon. The toss for corners was won by Kelly, who took that which placed his back to the sun. All being in readiness, the principals and seconds shook hands across what was to be "the bloody chasm," and then began

THE FIGHT.

Round 1.—Caution was the word when they faced each other, but they did not waste much time in sparring, a few feints and a light exchange forming the prelude to a heavy delivery by Busey, who slipped down before Tom could give change. Time, one minute.

2. J. Busey, on coming to the scratch, showed the first trickling of claret, which was gently taking from his upper lip. First blood for Kelly. Both men had a wary eye on each other, and after some sparring, Kelly succeeded in planting his bunch of fives on Busey's mouth. After more sparring, and one or two light exchanges, the round closed by Kelly getting down. Time, two minutes.

3. Busey came up with wicked intent in his eye, and succeeded in sending home a good 'un on Kelly's right cheek, but it was soon returned with interest by Tom, who got in on Busey's jaw, when he got down. Time, one and one-half minutes.

4. Kelly led off and hit his opponent two or three severe blows, when Busey went to grass to avoid more of the same sort. Time, one and one-half minutes.

5. Busey was a little shy, but rallied after a tap or two from Kelly. Both men went at it in earnest, when Tom, by a well directed fast hander, succeeded in knocking Busey off his pins. First knock down for Kelly. Time, two minutes.

6. This round was confined principally to sparring and a few body blows until Ke ly finally succeeded in knocking Busey down. Time, three minutes.

7. Kelly received a cast over the eye and Busey attempted to force the fighting, but was outgeneraled in every instance, when Kelly got in two terrible blows on Fred's nose and mouth, making the blood flow freely. Time, three and a half minutes.

8. Busey cautiously came to time, and sparring and feints continued on both sides for over two minutes, when Busey made a rush and succeeded in sending Kelly to mother earth in his own corner. Time, four minutes; $100 to $8 was here offered on Kelly, but no takers.

9, 10, 11 and 12. These rounds were merely a repetition of the four previous ones, Kelly, in nearly every instance, having the advantage by superior skill in the art. In one, Busey threw Tom, falling heavily upon him, in round 11 Kelly dealt a very severe blow on Fred's head, which made him reel as a drunken man.

13. The balance of the rounds were of a similar character, Kelly having the best of it all the way through, and the only question awaiting settlement was as to the amount of punishment Busey was willing to take before acknowledging defeat. At the termination of the 27th round Busey's second threw up the sponge, and thus closed the combat. The time of the fight was 2½ minutes. With the exception of a cut and blackened eye, the victor was without visible signs of having engaged in a fistic combat; Busey, on the other hand, was severely punished, and it is stated that his jaw was fractured.

ED. JAMES' TESTIMONIAL.

Two operations having recently been performed upon Mr. James' eyes, his physician has advised him to take a few weeks' vacation and seek a change of climate, with a view to recuperation, that he may be better prepared to undergo a course of strychnia treatment for his obscured and failing sight. This is necessary, as his system is at present too much weakened to admit of the treatment proposed, which his medical adviser is confident will benefit very beneficially. Upon hearing of this, Harry Hill kindly placed his theatre, No. 86 East 30th street, as well as the regular company, at the disposal of Mr. James on Thursday, Oct. 24th, from three o'clock until half-past seven o'clock, P. M., which offer was accepted by him. Our readers are, therefore, informed that upon the date mentioned there will be presented at Hill's an entertainment unusually attractive in character. In its embrace, in addition to the olio performances of the artists there engaged, wrestling bouts, Indian club swinging and exhibitions of the science of self-defence. The chief feature will be the competition for a hunting cap watch, to be sparred for by members of the lightweight division. The names of those who wish to try for this prize will be placed together in a hat, shook up, and two taken out at a time, the men whose names are thus drawn to spar for the space of thirteen minutes, fighting with hard will be three rounds, the first and second rounds to occupy four minutes each, and the last five minutes, one minute being allowed for rest between the rounds. Such is the style in which the prize fighting competition are conducted in England, and besides being more exciting and giving greater satisfaction to the spectators than contests where science alone is to decide, such encounters are calculated to prove beyond doubt which is the best man. As the winner will, perhaps, be obliged to spar two or more times to establish his claim, and as it is next to a certainty that all the A 1 sparrers of Gotham, Brooklyn, Jersey City and Newark will have a go for the sweater, those who attend will be afforded a rich treat. The judges will be selected from the audience, thus insuring impartiality and giving all who enter an equal chance. Outside of this, too, there will be sparring between men of all weights, as also vocalism, etc., by volunteers, and the mammoth show will be brought to a close by a display of the manly art between two men of note and heavy calibre, whose names will be announced in due time. The proceeds of the entertainment will be devoted to defraying the expenses of Mr. James during a tour through the Canadas, and as he is deserving of the support of the sporting fraternity, and at present is in need of substantial favors, it is to be hoped that they will, one and all, come forward cheerfully and contribute toward making the affair a complete success.

MIKE TRAINOR was the stamp receiver at the New York Assembly Rooms, Twenty-second street and First avenue, on Saturday evening, Oct. 12th, and we are pleased to state that he had a very good house, while the boxing was first-rate, the sparrers coming forward willingly and lending a helping hand to the beneficiary. The sets-to were between Johnny Saunders and Paddy Hogan, Tommy and Johnny Lazarus, Barney Grimm and Omealia, Geo. Siler and Mike Donovan, Mike Coburn and Hop Bagley, Mike Sullivan and Wm. Welsh, Eddy Hearne and Pat McGee, Boyle and Short, and the wind-up between Trainor and Arthur Chambers, which was first-rate. Tovee was M. C.

PATSY HOGAN, be it remembered, takes his benefit at Harry Hill's, 26 East Houston street, on Thursday afternoon of the current week, Oct. 17th. Good sparring and an abundance of it may be looked for, and the closing bout will bring into opposition the clever beneficiary any Patsy of New Haven, whose surname it is Sheppard.

ARRIVED OUT.—From a letter received last week we learn that Jim Mace and companions arrived off Queenstown on Sept. 30th, and are now, we presume, enjoying themselves in the British metropolis.

BAT MULLINS left this port for Liverpool, Eng., on the steamer Queen, which sailed on Wednesday, Oct. 9th. A challenge to Billy Edwards from him was sent to Bell's Life a few days prior to his departure.

A "FIDDLER" NEARY, a brother of "Donkey" Neary, and Tom Smith have staked a small deposit for a match, and are to meet at Chambers and Seddons' hostelrie, 205 Market street, Newark, N. J., on Saturday evening, 19th inst., to draw up articles.

ENOCH KELLEY forfeited the five dollars posted for a match with Billy Salt, having failed to go on with the negotiations at the time appointed to sign articles.

JACK MILLER'S address is wanted by his brother Harry, who will receive a letter sent to No. 50 West Houston street, this city, or 205 Market street, Newark, N. J.

JOHNNY SAUNDERS is on the bills for a mattnee benefit at Harry Hill's on the 31st inst.

WE HAVE A LETTER for Prof. Bill Clark.

CRICKET.

THE INTERNATIONAL MATCH.

The match between eleven English players, of New York and Philadelphia, and eleven Americans, of Philadelphia, which was commenced on the Germantown cricket grounds on Friday, October 11th, resulted in a drawn game, the second innings of the English eleven not being concluded when darkness put a stop to play on Saturday, the rule in such cases making the match a draw. The English went to bat on Friday, and scored 125 runs, of which Smith, of Philadelphia, scored 34; Cox and Bance, of New York, respectively, 14 and 13, and Pearson—professional—14; Cammell, of Philadelphia, scoring 10, not out, and 12. The bowlers were the brothers Hargreaves, Law and Brewster, all young Philadelphians; neither the Newhalls nor Meade played, and consequently the Americans did not present their strength. In their first innings they scored 83, and disposing of the English for 47 in their second innings, went in to get 11 to win. They had scored 68 of this number, with the loss of but five wickets, when "time" was called, the game ending in a draw. The full score below gives particulars:—

BILLIARDS.

DEATH OF WILLIAM LAKE.—It is reported that Prof. William Lake, who as a mace player was without an equal, was buried on Saturday week. At the time of his death he was in his seventy-third year of his age. Since 1855 Prof. Lake had not mingled much with the profession of which he was so long a representative, and his last professional appearance was as referee in the match at the Cooper Institute between John Deery and William Goldthwait. He afterwards kept a billiard room, containing three tables, at Tarrytown, Westchester county, N. Y., but it was rather a retreat than a speculation.

THE WHEREABOUTS AND DOINGS OF JOSEPH DION.—He was in Flint, Mich., on the 5th. Since then he has given exhibitions in Saginaw, Bay City and Grand Rapids. On the 1st he played at Fort Huron, assisted by James G. Bennet, ex-champion of Canada. The French carom game of 73 points was first played. Dion winning by 30, his best run being 25, and his average 16. The victor and four of the best amateurs of the place then played a 730 point game of four ball caroms. Dion's majority over the combination was 430, and his average 93¾, his best run being 203.

SAMUELLS' TOURNAMENT.—This project, not depending upon promises, will be carried to its legitimate conclusion, and without in any way interfering with any other proposed tourney. The Shoe fixed, in the second week in April, and entries should be addressed to Mr. Samuells.

THE CHAMPIONSHIP.—John Deery has not abated a jot of his purpose to call Cyrille Dion out, and in our next we shall have what promised challenge for the championship, which has been delayed because of the absence from the city of one of Deery's backers.

RANDALL SHOAF.—This popular room keeper, best known in Omaha, has been in Gotham all the week, and was taken in all his great sights. He purposes making extensive alterations in his rooms, which in his absence is managed by his brother.

THE THREE-BALL TOURNAMENT.—This affair, comprehending the championship of the world at the three-ball game, is running along in promising. It has not come to "a show" yet, and until it does it is useless to flutter the public mind about it.

BASE BALL.

THE PRIZE TOURNAMENT.

An account of the first four days' play in the tournament which commenced on the Union grounds, Brooklyn, E. D., on Oct. 8th, will be found upon one of our outside pages. On Saturday, 12th inst., the fifth game of the tourney and the second of the series of three between the Athletics and Mutuals, was played. The Philadelphia team, who had won the previous game by a score of 9 to 7—being strong favorites in the betting. It was a well played game throughout, each side being whitewashed half a dozen times, but the seven runs made by the Athletics in the first innings could not be overcome, they finally winning by exactly that number. The game was marked by a splendid one-handed catch by Eggler in the ninth innings, Cuthbert also distinguishing himself by taking several fly balls in style. The score follows:—

Runs earned—Athletic, 1; Mutual, 1. Umpire—Mr. Ferguson. Time of game—1 hour and 40 minutes.

On Monday, 14th inst., the sixth game was played, the contest again being the Athletics and Boston. It resulted in a tie game, 10 to 10, after eleven innings, darkness putting a stop to play, and the length of the match preventing the throwing contest. The score was as follows:—

Innings.	1st	2d	3d	4th	5th	6th	7th	8th	9th	10th	11th
Athletic	5	1	1	0	0	0	0	0	1	0	1—10

This obliges the clubs to play another match for the first prize.

BOSTON vs. BALTIMORE.

On Saturday, Oct. 12th, the seventh championship game between the Bostons and Baltimores was played at Baltimore, Md., and resulted, after a tiresome and uninteresting contest, which was brought to an end at the conclusion of the sixth innings, in the triumph of the Reds. The score is appended:

SHORT STOPS.—The Confidence Club, of New Rochelle, defeated the Stars, of Mount Vernon, N. Y., on Oct. 8th, scoring 40 to 9. The Senecas, of Oil City, Pa., won two out of the three games played recently with the G. M. Roths, of Philadelphia. The game between the Pelicans and Empires, played at New Orleans, La., on the 6th inst., the former scored 31 to 13. The Lexingtons polished off the Franklins in a game which took place at Harlem, L. I., on the 5th. The third game between the Westerns, of Keokuk, and the Stars of Ottumwa, Iowa, was played on Oct. 3d, the Westerns scoring a victory; score, 18 to 7.

KNICKERBOCKER VS. STATEN ISLAND.—The match between these clubs, at Hoboken, N. J., Oct. 12th, resulted as follows:—

BILL AND I.

We two had been—well, never mind;
The past is nought to any man;
And future comes, as to the wind
Who pace a dew-girt forest glade,
To feel the sunshine and the shade
Creep over being's viewless plan.

We wandered on a trackless sea,
As willed them pilots of the air,
Who drove us here, or wafted there;
And each day wained more diversely,
For each still shrunk the scanty store,
That parted hunger from despair.
At last we'd nothing left to stare,
Save certainly that hope there o'er.

Thoughts rendered in our lurid eyes,
Which flashed with wild, infernal fires,
Fed by those ravenous desires
Whose fearful shadows ran to rise.
We neither dared to close that sight,
For death was in the womb of sleep,
And every bond of life was gone
Which bade a man his brother keep.
So, through the stark eye drifted on,
Each watching weary for the light—
We grimly smiled to see it leap
From a huge black cloud, on the deep,
And slowly make the thown bright.

But both in sullen silence sat
Till Bill gave fashion to our thought—
"If one, mate, in the locker's naught,
And we shall surely starve on that;
So one, or both of us, must die."
What say you?" "Bill, you're not for Knaves;
The Jack of Clubs to give one sight
To rule the line of destiny!
The other—why, he, dying, saves
A comrade for felicity!"

Then, with a hollow, hungry laugh,
Fierce, feline, in his eye,
He seized the greasy crumpled pack,
Which oft had shortened merry hour,
While thoughtless ease retained the power,
From pleasure's tide, a toy to quaff.
The cards he shuffled to and fro,
With trembling hands, affecting ease,
And ere I stammered out a "No!"
With haughty gesture, flung me one,
And faced another on my knees.

The hardness of a hateful age
Seemed gathered to a moment's head,
As in Bill's only'ring face I read
The livid lines of deep'rate dread,
That flayed thought famished rage
For food—which my flesh must assuage.
Why should I pause, lost fate should yield
That glaring demon to my hand?
His sympathies were gone, or steeled
To nature's uttermost demand.

I turned my card—the Knave of Spades
Was greeted by a boisterous roar—
In haste the harmless toy I tore,
Then dared again the doom of fate;
For pride, when wrecking passion aids,
Can scale remorse, and bell explore,
Where loving is transformed to hate.

Again we drew; and still again;
Until the cards were shrunk to three—
Each with supreme shook visibly,
But Bill breathed hard—he seemed to see
The hidden features of the bane
He most discover presently,
The room from my heart a hellish glee
Burst bitterly the bonds of law,
For, in his face
I saw—what knew
He knew what card he was to draw.

One hand was stretched to take his lot,
The other stealthy sought his side,
While mine in quick response must glide
Toward weapons that I had forgot.
Our eyes grew venomous with light;
The blood ebbed from each quivering cheek;
Both mustered breath, as though to speak
The thunders of Jehovah!
And half the turning of a hair
Had brought that bloody demon there,
Who rules o'er ruthless fight.

But then, from out a boiling sea,
Uprose a finny flock,
Who blindly smote with sudden shock
Upon our misery;
Or striking the expanded sail,
In manna strange, pelted down like hail
The life that sheath'd it by.
Nor need you ask if we forbore
The frenzy of our strife,
Or knot from God's hand thankfully,
What was needed more.

That eve a tall ship hove in sight,
And we were ta'en on board,
So utterly bereft of might
Life seemed a loss restored,
When shrivelled Hope had taken flight,
Out-wearied with his ward.

ROSY. B. HOLT.

AN IRISH COUNTRY DANCE.

Some time ago I was invited by a rural friend of mine to attend a country ball, which was to come off in a large barn adjoining his house, situate between Divis and Lough Neagh, in the County of the County Antrim. Having never had a desire to see a dance of this sort, I went, and I shall now endeavor to give my readers a correct idea of one of these rustic gatherings in that part of the country, and to narrate briefly my rather strange adventures that night.

On arriving at the residence of my friend, I was ushered into a long room off the kitchen—or, as the country folk have it, "up the house"—where I found a few rosy damsels, dressed very gaily, partaking of wine or whiskey and biscuits, and chatting over the coming events. On my entrance, however, they ceased to eat as well as to talk, and though repeatedly pressed to "put forrit their han'," resolutely refused to refresh themselves further with the good things on the table. I observed, too, that those of whom I had not finished their liquor, sipped it in a way that was anything but natural, and always glanced over to see whether I was looking or not before they ventured to drink. But in a little while they grew more confident, and half an hour afterwards, when I had shared in the hospitality of the house, we all proceeded to the barn together, the best of friends.

On entering the door of that important edifice, the first thing that attracted my notice was the chandelier. It consisted of a broomstick, nailed perpendicularly in the centre of two crossed sticks, and was thus suspended from a rafter about the middle of the room. On the four ends of these crossed sticks were fastened four half-penny candles, and this, with the addition of two more candles at the same price which adhered to the walls at either end of the house, served to adorn and light the happy scene. All around the barn were placed, for seats, long planks, which rested on barrels and sacks of corn, and at the further end something like a platform was erected, which, on inquiry, I was told was "fur the fiddlers." We seemed to be just in time, for these gentlemen, two in number, entered immediately after us, and mounting the platform, began, with an air of great consequence, to screw up their instruments and rosin their bows.

Every seat in the barn was already occupied. Girls and boys were sitting together in pairs, chatting, laughing or whispering tenderly to one another, but all impatient to begin the dance. I ensconced myself in a quiet corner to watch the proceedings, and I had not long to wait.

When the gentlemen of the orchestra had got through the tedious and somewhat squeaky process of tuning, they began to step over some tunes lightly—whether on their own account, or by way of a preliminary coaxer, I cannot say—but instantly up rose about a dozen pairs, and formed themselves round for the dance.

"Now, boys, give us somethin' fur a good figure!" said, or rather shouted, one of the happy swains to the fiddlers.

And forthwith the musicians began to make rather violent exertions in determined endeavors to give every one in the place the privilege of hearing the mellifluous harmonies of "Bessie Block." In a moment they were all in their places; and at a given signal from the gentleman who had commanded the violinists to begin, off they went into "hands across," "ladies' chain," "the next partner," "shuffle and cut," &c., each one dancing as if every eye in the barn was upon him or her—the girls slipping about with all the grace they could muster, and the boys shuffling through, with their heads up, in what they evidently considered unparalleled style. This was kept up—it being an eight-part figure—for about fifteen minutes; at the end of which time the perspiration was to be observed trickling from a goodly number of noses, and most of all from the protuberances of the fiddlers. At the conclusion, the boys led the girls to a seat—on their knees, be it whispered—and the fiddlers having refreshed themselves with a "dhrop of somethin' sthrong," a fresh party rose and arranged themselves for another dance. This time, a tall young man of rather primitive appearance, wearing a red necktie and a collar that enveloped about half his head, spoke to the musicians thus:—

"Billy! a say, Billy! hi, Billy!—strack us up somethin' fur an owl reel; the divil a bit o' use the other dance is."

When he had thus politely made his request, he spat on his hand, and otherwise energetically prepared to "show thim a bit o' dancin'," as he himself expressed it. And "show thim a bit of dancin'!" he certainly did. In setting to his partner, he dived from one side to the other in the most indicrous manner, no doubt intending it for graceful motion; and when it came to facing his partner, he drew himself up as erect as a maypole, and hammered the old dingy floor till he was lost, or nearly so, amid the dust he had raised. Then off he would shoot again, with the air of a man who has just performed a great action, mostly managing to come into rather violent collision with some unfortunate couple who chanced to be in his way. I may mention in his behalf, however, that the name of the "owl reel" to which they were dancing was the decidedly attractive and inspiring one of "The smokin' bowl of tay." This had doubtless something to do with the zealous manner in which he acquitted himself. "The smokin' bowl of tay" having been disposed of, a fresh set rose; and so on until every one in the house had danced two or three times. The names they had given to a good many of their tunes are worthy of notice.

As every tune was played I inquired the name of it, and was sometimes gravely answered "The Pot of Paritch," "What the Divil Ails Ye?" "Pay Soup," or such like unpretending titles. Shakespeare says "What's in a name?" but really I think Will would have changed his mind on the subject had he heard a few like the foregoing.

When, at about twelve o'clock, the last set, previous to a change in the programme, were on the floor, I was observed that the barn was so full that there were no seats left for those who were dancing. Accordingly my rural acquaintance, who had been vainly entreating me half the night to dance, came to me and intimated, with an air of the utmost solemnity, that as I would not join the dance I should at least have to nurse—in other words, that I should have to take one of the damsels upon my knee. Of course, I remonstrated earnestly with him on the subject, but all was of no avail.

"It's no use, now," said he; "yer not goin' to git sittin' there, stuck up in a corner all night. I'll go and git ye a sweetheart afther this dance is over."

Here was a predicament. Anything in reason I would have gladly done to make myself agreeable; but this—and I think my readers will agree with me—I considered out of the question.

The fair creatures, with all possible respect to them, had an appearance of physical prosperity which at once brought me to the conclusion that most of their dresses contained from ten to twelve stones avoirdupois—a conclusion that made me not a whit less anxious to get out of my little difficulty.

However, seeing that I should probably give trouble, and, perhaps, offence by refusing, and that the thing was quite customary and thought nothing of, I at length permitted my friend to introduce me to one of the rosy country girls by depositing her upon my knee—which, I may mention, she seemed to take quite as a matter of course.

All, or nearly all, the ladies having been settled in a similar manner, a song was proposed, and shortly the tall young man who had danced so vehemently, and who were the prodigal display of linen round his neck, stepped out into the floor, and, after a few introductory semibreves, began:—

"Och, come all ye party girls an' boys,
An' listen unto me,
An' I'll sing to you of my sweet love—
Her like you never did see.
Her face it was like the mornin', boys,
Just afther a big night's rain;
But now, ochone! I my dar-lint—"

Here he suddenly stopped. Whether overcome by his feelings, or unable to reach the high note, I would not venture to say.

"If tow'! yes I couldn't sing it!"—(he had communicated nothing of the kind to any one)—"but with yer lave, I'll just give yes a neighborly growl iv another one."

Having made known this laudable determination, he jerked up the illustrious collar by the points, cleared his throat, and after a few unsuccessful attempts to come upon the note which it seemed necessary for him to begin upon, sang, with his eyes apparently fixed on a cobweb in the ceiling, the following love-ditty:—

"Twas on a fine day (say maw-or-nin',
When flowers they war bloomin', O!—(A prolonged)
The sun was shinin' brightly, and
The birds they all war singin', O!
I met my love in Banbridge Town,
My charmin', bloomin' Sally, O!
An' she was the flower in the County Down—
The flower iv Magherwally, O!"

In this strain he continued to tell his feelings towards the "charmin' bloomin' Sally, O!" through about eight stanzas—all quite as touching and beautiful as the specimen given. When he had finished, he was loudly encored by an appreciative and delighted audience, as the papers have it, and responded by giving them another, in which he lamented the loss of some fascinating "Mary Ann," who had first robbed him of his heart, and then had taken her departure for "Amer-i-cay," without having previously informed him of her intentions.

In this manner the time was passed until about one o'clock, when it was proposed that they should begin a game of "Kiss in the chair."

This proposal was readily agreed to, and accordingly the game—which is almost similar to our forfeits—was soon gone into in right earnest.

A chair was placed in the centre of the room. The young men then cast lots, and the lucky man became the first occupant of the chair. His eyes were then blindfolded, and, all being ready, he named her who was supposed to have taken possession of his heart. The task of the happy lady thus named was to touch the chair and regain her seat without being caught by her blindfolded votary, and the penalty of being caught by him was, of course, a kiss.

When a lady occupied the chair the case was reversed. He who escaped her came in for the kiss, and he who was caught by her had to content himself with the hope of better fortune. It is a remarkable fact, however, that none of the ladies seemed to believe in over-exerting themselves, doubtless for reasons of their own.

This gentle pastime was kept up to the entire satisfaction of all parties till about three o'clock. The manœuvres of some of the gentlemen to effectually guard the chair from the touch of the fair ones, or themselves to touch it when a lady was the occupant, afforded much merriment, and the taking or giving of forfeits—the sounds of which were sometimes rather more emphatic than the innocent lovers intended—causing even more amusement.

Refreshments followed, and I was taken "up the house" as before; and there found myself in the midst of peace and plenty. Upon the centre of a very large table were three formidable pyramids of loaf bread, oaten bread and biscuit, and occupying a prominent position was a very stout, able bodied bottle, containing, of course, the "rale stuff."

"Now, Misther ——, take a sate—take a sate and make yerself at home. Here, Tammy, raitch us over that dhrop iv whisky. Ye'll jist take a wee half-un o' this, won't ye?"

And forthwith my host poured out half a tumbler.

"Now, what kind iv bread will ye thry? Maybe, ye'll be fur the biscuit?"

And the pyramid of biscuit was, at the imminent risk of toppling down, placed beside me. I chose, however, a slice of the loaf bread, and I found it quite sufficient for me, for it could not have been less than an inch and a half thick—not speaking of the quarter-inch more of butter. Twice or thrice I almost inclined my jaw in an endeavor to get it between my teeth. When at length, by skilful management, I had succeeded in eating the entire slice, I was assailed with——

"Why, Misther ——, yer atin' nothin' at all. Put forrit yer han' and do somethin'. Here, Tammy, shove over the oaten bread. Maybe ye'll thry a farl of thim, this time."

A very pleasant hour having been spent here, we returned to the barn to dance the last dance. Whether it was owing to a different mood, or to the height my friend had raised his elbow when pouring out my liquor, I am unable to say, but the fact is certain—I joined the boys in this dance. The partner I chose was the lady for whom I had acted as nurse throughout the evening.

"May I have the pleasure?" said I, offering her my arm.

"Till be shure ye can," she replied, with a bewitching smile.

And soon we were as actively engaged in the dance as any couple in the room.

Having nearly knocked down three other couples, seriously injured my self-possession, I cannot exactly say what, and my partner and myself twice by treading upon her skirts, I began to consider discretion the better part of valor and—sat down. At this eventful epoch the dance was more than half gone through.

My partner and I adjusted ourselves on a couple of sacks of corn and watched and talked till it was finished, an event that no sooner took place than—"O, world of wonders, and O, world of wonders!"—the candles were all suddenly extinguished, and every one was left to scramble out of the barn as best he could.

Thus ended the ball in the barn, which I have sketched, in every particular, exactly as I saw it.

DUFFER LOW JIM.

A Sensation Drama, Not by the Author of the Bufferlo Bill. (With Notes.)

WRITTEN FOR THE NEW YORK CLIPPER.

SCENE 1.—A Western Perara—A Party of Indians Discovered, carousing. They come down and sing a CHORUS.

In the wild buffalo's track,
At the breaking of day,
When the hunter's horn
Wakes the early morn,
We must fold up our tents and
Away, and away,—
Tra-la-la-la, tra-la-la-la, etc.

THE CHIEF FOGARALLA.—When the night descends upon the hills at the beck of the great Manito, the world veils its eye and sleeps; but when the rising sun at the beck of the aforesaid drinks up, even as an old toper his first cocktail, the dews of the prairie, the son of the forest takes to the trail in search of his beloved. Ah! Hokey Pokey. (Sighs heavily.)

WANKEY FUM.—Why stands the mighty chief of the Bacca Smokars thus silently apart? Knows he not that the buffalo is already astir and the scent of the white man is keen?

FOG.—The eye of the buffalo is round and clear, but it is as a bubble in a pool of ink to the eye of Hokey Pokey.

WANKEY.—In sooth! in sooth! in the company of the pale face has greater charms for the eye of the flower of the Bacca Smokars than that of its chief. But why speak in the singular number? Is it to imply that she goes but one eye upon thee?

FOG.—A singular question! But, hark! (Bends his ear to the ground.) I hear a sound like the roar of the terrible avalanche. It is the stampede of the wily buffalo. Ere the sun is midway in the heavens, the smoke of a dozen haunches shall ascend from our wigwams.

WANKEY.—(Aside.) Ere that hour has arrived, a score of scalps shall dangle at my saddle bow! and the beautiful Hokey Pokey shall share my flight to the lands of the setting sun. Pokonogashie!‡

ALL.—Ki-i-i-i-i! (They mount real horses and gallop away, shouting; all but Wankey Fum, who sneaks off in an opposite direction.)

SCENE 2.—A Deep Glen. Enter Jessaline in great agitation.§

JESS.—I fear me I have lost my way; yet could I swear I heard the sound of their horns. An indefinable dread seizes upon me. Should the savages find and slay me, I am lost indeed. Ah! a stranger!

Enter DUFFER JIM, with rifle.

DUF.—Whoop! Wild cats and catamounts! where's all them Injuns? I hain't had a shot at one for more'n twenty minutes. Ha! what have we here?—a female woman? Sail in, Jimmy! The fair sex never could stand your advances. How do? (Pulls on white kids and bows to her.)

JESS.—Excuse me, sir. I never speak to gentlemen without an introduction; yet something in your appearance induces me to ask the name of my ge-neerous preserver.

DUF.—What, not know me? Why, I thought there wa'n't a soul atwix' here and the jumpin' off place didn't know Duffer Jim. I'm half hoss, half wildcat, rest alligator. Whoop! (Cuts a pigeon wing.)

JESS.—Through this artless son of the wilderness I may yet regain my friends. (Aside.)—I will trust you, especially as there is nobody else to trust.

DUF.—Dern my skin! aint she a beauty, though!‖ If I was only in the marryin' line, now. But come—I reckon it's about time for us to get up and get.

INDS (without).—Ki-i-i-i-i!

JESS.—Merciful heavens! the savages are upon us.

DUF.—Let 'em come on! Just place yourself behind me, and I'll chaw 'em up like so many quids o' tobacky, dern my skin!

[With another yell the Bacca Smokars precipitate themselves upon the hunter—music—Duffer Jim performs prodigies of valor, but at this instant a herd of real buffaloes, hired from Mr. Barnum, stampede across the stage, and the Duffer is carried off on the horns of one of them, while Jessaline is dragged away by Indians.]

SCENE THREE.—Camp of Indians. Grand Indian War Dance.

FOGARALLA.—The Sun, at the beck of the great Manito, has descended from the Heavens, but my heart, like the flowers of the prairie, droops and is sad. There is no scalp at my girdle, there is no haunch in my wigwam, and Hokey Pokey is not here to cheer me.

INDS (without).—Ki-i-i-i-i!

Enter HOKEY POKEY with JESS.

HOKEY.—Great chief, behold me here.

FOG.—(Starts.) It is she. Star of my eyes, whose step is as light as the bound of the agile grasshopper, lo! the chief of the Bacca Smokers kisses the hem of thy garments.

JESS.—A-hem!

FOG.—A stranger? (Starts.) And beautiful, too! Daughter of the pale face, whose knife so oft has drank the blood of my kin, what ill wind brought thee hither?

JESS.—O, spare me, spare me!

FOG.—There is no buffalo meat in my wigwam, and she is young and tender (eyeing her). Stay. Since Hokey Pokey still disdains my seuit, this fascinating stranger shall be my wife.

WANKEY FUM.—(Entering suddenly.)—Not as you knows on.¶ The maiden of the golden hair, whose face is as the lilly of the valley, whose breath is as the Balm of a Thousand Flowers, is my captive, and even the great chief lays claim to her at his peril.

FOG.—Presumptuous bo-ay! A dozen wives already mourn their fate within thy lodge. E'en Hokey Pokey's thine. Won't this content thee?

WANKEY.—Blow Hokey! Let this boat decide it. (Produces two broadswords. They fight. Wankey is run through.) My hour has come; send for the Great Medicine. I—I go to the happy hunting grounds of my fathers. (Dies.)

FOG.—Now, girl of the pale face, I may claim thee for my own.

HOKEY.—My Wankey dead? Then life is but a fraud, and thus I end it. (Stabs herself and dies by the side of Wankey.

INDS (without).—Ki-i-i-i-i-i!

FOG.—The camp surprised while I stand dallying here? Let her be guarded. Upon them, Bacca Smokers. To-morrow's sun shall see their scalp locks dangling in front of our wigwams. (Dashes off with tomahawk drawn, but re-enters with the DUFFER, *fighting.—Desperate combat—Indians rush on, Ki-i-ing as usual—*DUFFER JIM tackles them all, single-handed, slays FOGARALLA *and puts the rest to rout—*JESSALINE *throws herself into his arms—*Band plays "Hail Columbia"—Tableau.]

CURTAIN.

* This sounds a little like the "Wild Chamois" song, but let it slide—it is so characteristic of the Indian on his native prairies.

† Indians don't ride saddles. However—

‡ Native Injun for, "You bet your boots."

§ What was she doing in such a place, anyhow?

‖ The actress is requested not to blush while this speech is being delivered.

¶ We doubt if Indians ever use such language as this, but let it slide.

SICK AND ALONE.

WRITTEN FOR THE NEW YORK CLIPPER.

BY ELSIE MAY.

Sick and alone! the soft breezes float by,
Chasing the clouds from the long shadowed sky;
Sunbeams steal out from the rifts of a cloud,
Gilding the tree tops so gracefully bowed;
Perfume steals in from the opening flowers,
Bringing fair visions of summery hours;
Spring's verdant beauty pervades the appears,
Wooing my sight through its curtains of tears.

Sick and alone! oh, the heart-pangs will come
At thought of the loved in my far away home;
Naught bright in nature brings joy to my heart,
Beauty but causes the sad tears to start;
No one is near me to love and to bless,
With its sweet patience of love's tenderness.
No gentle hand soothes the dull, weary pain,
Or to my heart sends a sunbeam again.

Alas! is there no one that careth for me?
And should my life ebb into death's sea,
Would no one weep when they heard the words said
By the dirge bell tolling "One, for the dead?"
Oh! there is so much of sadness in life,
Yet, when we speak of its sorrow or strife
They're as nothing to us; much like a sneer,
As though we shook words, "sick and alone!"

AN ELOPEMENT.

A Man in Years Runs Off with a Lass in her Teens.

A strange elopement occurred at Milltown, Pa., on the Monongahela river, on or about the 5th inst., the parties thereto, says the Pittsburgh Daily Dispatch, being Geo. Hopkins, proprietor of a tavern at Milltown and of other valuable property in that neighborhood, and a girl named Mary Ostrange, who had been employed as a domestic in his family. Hopkins is more than fifty years of age, and, judging from his photograph, not by any means an Adonis or Apollo in appearance. On the contrary, he seems rather crooked and weatherbeaten, and would seemingly be one of the last men to fascinate the feminine mind. The girl, on the contrary, is quite a beauty, just budding into womanhood, and bearing on her countenance an imprint of freshness and innocence which makes it surpassing strange that she should voluntarily have united her fortune to the partner of her alleged flight.

Hopkins leaves a wife and seven children rather poorly provided for now that he is gone, since before starting he took the precaution to change a large portion of his property into gold, from which it is inferred that he contemplated a trip across the sea. The incident has created quite a degree of excitement in the neighborhood where the parties lived, and much odium has been incurred by the missing man. It is but justice to him, however, to state, that beyond the circumstance of their cotemporaneous disappearance there does not seem to be any evidence of criminal relations between them. Officer Seth Wilmot, one of the most experienced of our city detectives, has the case at present in hand, but is not sanguine as to the chances of overhauling the fugitives.

SAVED FROM A LIFE OF SHAME.—At St. Louis, Mo., on the 6th inst., a bright-eyed, brown-haired, bonnie girl, with more than ordinary claims to beauty, presented herself at the Third district station, and demurely requested that her name might be placed on the list of the fallen. She submitted with considerable reluctance to the social evil catechism, and admitted that she came from Peoria, Illinois, where her parents lived and where she had spent the greater part of her life. Three months ago she fell from her maidenly estate and kept up for some time an affair with a fast young man. But the people of the Central City are severely respectable, and have little pity for the girl who slips from the path of virtue. Then, too, the young husband of the girl's sister, or one about to hold that place, Fearing to pursue longer her intrigues in the sober old town, and unwilling also to yield the cup of pleasure which she had just began to taste, she slipped away from home and old associations, and came to St. Louis, says the Times of the 6th inst., adding that "one day last week there was trouble in the Hayes-Fair mansion on Christy avenue. The guarded portal had opened and let in a stalwart Peorian. There was instant recognition and then a long interview. The inmates of the house knew only the result. A little later the young girl sallied out and sought the police station. When she came out the register was minus the name of Belle Rodgers. Last night Madame Mederrenchner's parlors lacked the Peoria belle who had graced them for only half a week, and there traveled northward a silent couple carrying an unsold sensation known only to themselves."

A FAIR DEAL IN COURT.—On the 9th inst, at Jefferson Market Police Court, Christiana Deal, formerly of Stamford, Conn., now an inmate of a "female boarding house" in West Thirtieth street, was arraigned by Detective Hagan, of the Thirtieth street station, on complaint of a matronly looking woman named Mary Delavergne, of East Fifteenth street, charged with disorderly conduct. The complainant stated that the prisoner had been in the habit of going out to supper, theatres and carriage riding with her husband; that she had completely alienated his affections from her, and, in consequence of his being an old, grey headed man, and the father of several children who had grown up respectably, she desired that some means be adopted to prevent any further annoyance of a similar nature. She stated that the habit of visiting the prisoner almost nightly, squandering his money on her. On one occasion she found them seated at a table in a saloon together eating supper; confronted them; spoke a few sarcastic words to her faithless spouse, and left them to finish their repast. What occurred on his return home she failed to state. The prisoner was represented by Major Stiner, and carefully informed Mrs. Delavergne that she had been on intimate terms with her husband for the last ten years, but did not know he was a married man, as he was known to her by some other name. The complainant stated that all she desired was that the prisoner keep away from her husband and never be seen with him again. Upon the promise of counsel that his client would comply with the request, Justice Cox suspended judgement in the case and discharged the prisoner.

HOW HE LOST HIS MONEY.—William Warfield, an old, gray-haired individual, arrived in this city on the morning of the 8th inst., on a sloop from New Bedford, Mass., having in his possession $50 in money, for the avowed purpose of getting into some business. He succeeded in investing his money in a manner that is not likely to prove very advantageously to him in a pecuniary point of view, but may in a moral. He stated that he was very fond of ladies' society, especially young and pretty ones. In the evening, while gaping at the various attractions on Broadway, a good-looking young girl approached him and wanted him to accompany her to her room in Amity street. As he had a little, leisure time he accepted the invitation, but remained only a short time, as the young lady complained of a severe pain in her side. He left, and when near the corner of Broadway and Canal street he formed the acquaintance of a certain Georgiana Way, who also gave him an invitation to accompany her to her room. As the latter wears good clothes and is attractive looking, Warfield could not resist the temptation, and states she took him to a room in York street. He remained here but a short time, as some friend came and demanded the room. On reaching the street he separated from his companion, but a few minutes after found his wallet was missing, and exclaimed:—"My God! I'm robbed." He felt in the opposite pocket and found the missing wallet, but minus $45 of his money. Georgiana was arrested by Officer Calhoun, of the Prince street station; but as Warfield was unable to swear which woman took his money, the prisoner was discharged.

PARISIAN SECRET POLICE AND DOMESTIC SCANDAL.—There is another and still more secret branch of this police system, which is interwoven with private life—which are considered very valuable by the Parisians; it acts, so to speak, as the head of a family, and unites its various secrets. Every day it is called in on matters which do not fall under the penal law. A young man had been the lover of a married lady of high social position, the mother of two children, and married to a very jealous husband. After the connection was broken off, he very imprudently kept her letters, which were found by a rival in a desk belonging to him. This rival wrote immediately to the lady:—"If by to-morrow at two o'clock you have not sent me fifty thousand francs, your letters will be placed in your husband's hands at three o'clock." The lady received this demand, and could not see her old lover until the following day, to tell him of the danger which menaced them. She did not possess the required sum, neither did her friend, or he did not wish to part with his money. He ran to the police; the time was short—it was noon. An hour after all the letters were destroyed; the wife reassured. The husband continued to live in peace, and the two children grew up without knowing their mother's dishonor.

A TRAGEDY IN TRENTON.—On the morning of the 9th inst., James S. Gray, a private watchman, and William Kelly, who keeps a store in Trenton, N. J., had an altercation near the United States Hotel, which resulted in the dangerous wounding of the latter by a revolver which Gray used, as he alleges, in self defence. It appears that Gray's attention was attracted to a woman with two small children loitering within a short distance of the United States Hotel. Seeing that they were alone and unprotected, as he thought, and wondering what could have been their motive in being on the streets at such an hour, he stepped up to the woman and said:—"Can I see you home or can I do anything for you?" She abruptly replied in rather a saucy manner that "it was none of his business." It appears that her husband, William Kelly, had gone into the hotel to take a drink, and when he came out Mrs. Kelly immediately informed him how she had been insulted by Gray. Gray made an explanation, told who he was and, exposing his badge, cautioned him to beware of what he was doing, but Kelly was inexorable. Gray speedily drew his revolver and lodged its contents in Kelly's neck, thereby causing a fearful, and what may prove to be a fatal wound.

ALLEGED IMPROPER CONDUCT OF A MINISTER.—A painful story has just reached us, which, if true, shows conduct of the most censurable kind on the part of a Wesleyan minister. It seems that a few weeks ago, a young lady, most respectably connected, who resided with her parents in one of the northern counties, left her home. Her friends came to Liverpool in search of her, and found that she had taken temporary lodgings with the view of proceeding in a few weeks to America. The circumstances that induced her to leave home are of the most painful character. It is said that her friends have ascertained that she was seduced by a minister who lived in the same town; that some time ago the minister, who is a married man with a family, went to America, leaving his wife and little ones behind, and that the young lady (who is near her confinement) had come to Liverpool for the purpose of proceeding to America to join her paramour. She was, however, induced to return home with her friends. The circumstance has created a most painful feeling in the district where the friends of the lady (who are much respected, and for whom the greatest sympathy is felt) reside.—Liverpool, Eng., Mercury.

PENALTIES OF KISSING.—A Missourian who stole a kiss from a pretty girl was fined by a magistrate, horsewhipped by her brother, and hurried into the brain fever by his wife. The clergyman also alluded to the affair in his sermon; the local editor took sides with the clergyman, and reviewed the case in print, and the potato-bug ate up every blade of the malefactor's wheat. And yet he is not happy.

A HORRIBLE DISCOVERY.—A young man in Danbury Conn., has just made the discovery that he has married a left-handed woman. All his buttons are sewed on the wrong side. He manages to get along as far as the rest of the garments are concerned; but when he dons a clean shirt he has to lay down on his back and lash his right hand to the bed-post. He is afraid he will have to use ghostrings.

LOVE'S LABOR LOST.—Several young men of Macon, Ga., recently serenaded the house in which dwelt two lovely sisters. For two mortal hours they tootled on the flute and twanged the light guitar. To their inexpressible disgust the colored cook at last informed them that their fair enslavers were absent, and that far her part she was tired and sleepy.

TELEGRAPHIC COURTSHIP.—Another marriage has recently been contracted between two telegraph operators who had never met before, stationed at London and Berlin, according to the report of Mr. Scudamore, British Director of Telegraphy, and society is much electrified at the occurrence.

"Right dress," says he, agin. "I'z got de right dress," says I, lookin' at my unniforms. "Left dress," says he agin. "Didn't leave it," says I. "As you were," says he, and I was startin' to go, when he yells out agin—"stand at ease," says he; but dere wasn't many couldn't stand at ease by dat time, I guess. I was standin' on one foot, and I was swellin' off, dragg'n' mine arter me on de grass. Just den the lan'lord comes along, swearin because some of de boys had been robbin' de hen roost. "What's dis comp'ny you call dis?" says he to me. De Baxter Muffins," says I. "You're more like a State Brigade," says he; and jus' den a whole squad of us went after de pigs wid charged bagnets, and de country folks cum after us wid pitchforks and hoes and shot guns, and such a squealin', and cackln' and cussin' and yellin'! I nebber heerd such a combobulation in my life! I'se resigned from dat corpse now.

INT.—A good thing for the corpse; we will now have

Walking Down the Lane.

One morn as I was walking, walking down the lane,
Beside the well within the dell I met my pretty Jane;
She laid her pitcher on the curb, one arm across it thrown,
And turned upon me such a glance as I have ne'er known.

Chorus—Where'er I turn, where'er I go,
I seek and seek in vain
For such a form as that I met
Within the walking lane.

Her waist was like a fairy's, made to throw an arm about,
And on her crimson lips there dwelt, O, such a pretty pout!
Although no costly silks she wore and jewelry had none,
I felt no fairer sight could be beneath that summer's sun.

Chorus—Where'er I turn, etc.

Just then there chanc'd to seize me such an overpow'ring thirst,
As though a smothered fire in my bosom I had nurst;
So, stepping up, I asked her for a cool, refreshing drink,
And, stooping, took a draught of love upon the fountain's brink.

Chorus—Where'er I turn, etc.

O, I'll ne'er forget that morning till many a year has flown,
For 'twas there I gain'd the privilege of calling her my own;
'Twas there our troth we plighted and the first sweet kiss I took,
Sweeter far than nectar sweet, at the well beside the brook.

Chorus—Where'er I turn, etc.

KNICKERBOCKER GAMES.

The managers and committee of the Knickerbocker Club had a lovely time of it on the grounds of the club, at Hoboken, N. J., on Friday, Oct. 11th, in the shape of a series of games of baseball. The weather was delightful, and the attendance was large. The first game was played by nine members of the club, and the second match between the Knickerbocker and Gotham Clubs, which was to be played Oct. 12, at Hoboken, and a series of games to be played with the Mutuals, on Oct. 14, 15 and 16, at the Union Grounds, Jersey City, were all postponed on account of the rain, until Oct. 26th. Some good play was made on Friday's game by Messrs. Hamilton, Hamster, Taylor and Hunsdon jr., while the batting of Messrs. Hamilton, Taylor and Hunsdon jr. was the best.

THE TURF.

JEROME PARK RACES.

THIRD DAY, TUESDAY, OCT. 8th.

There was a great falling off in the attendance at Jerome Park on Tuesday, the third day of the fall meeting, notwithstanding the fineness of the weather. The card contained five events, three of which were carried down to the score, and the fourth was removed to Joe Daniels, on the betting foreshadowed, long odds being laid on him, won the rich annual sweepstakes worth $4,165; Tubman followed suit in the Grand National Stakes, value $7,000, and Bonnie Ryder completed her stake nomination good for $10,345 by carrying off the $400 purse in the mile dash, the Mc-Daniels confederacy thus netting in one day $7,890, aggregating during the three days of the meeting the handsome total of $14,840, which will afford a large dividend to the four partners of this powerful stable after paying training expenses.

THE ANNUAL SWEEPSTAKES,

for three year olds, of $100 each, half forfeit, with $1,000 added by the Jockey Club, the second horse to save his stake, had 38 entries, of which only three came to the post—Col. McDaniels' starting two, Joe Daniels to win, Hubbard to get the horse for second money, and Major Bacon for his unicorn colt Leroy, son of Seabreeze, who had recovered from the lameness he had suffered from all the summer and prevented him starting in any of his summer engagements, for Daniels was so hot a favorite that Dr. Underwood, after selling a few pools, left him out, and sold on Hubbard and Bacon's colt only, the latter at first having the call, but the confederacy, through Mr. Hubbard, put down the money as freely that Joe Daniels became a namesake's equal as the favorite. We give a few of the pools sold:—

McDaniels' entry	$180	$180	$180	$700
Bacon's entry	25	40	40	125

WITH JOE DANIELS OUT.

Hubbard	$160	$110	$150	$280	$120	$100
Bacon	260	140	170	230	75	60

The distance was two miles and the start from the judges' stand. When the flag fell, Joe Daniels was first under weigh, Hubbard being second, but the latter was pulled back at the turn, and the Jack Malone colt took second place. Going around the club-house Hill Joe Daniels had opened a length, and continued to do so until they had entered the home-stretch, where Bacon's colt closed steadily, and was almost parallel with him as they went under the string on the second mile. Here Joe Daniels drew away again a clear length at the quarter pole, but Holloway urged the colt to higher speed, and got almost to the former's head as they went around the bluff, and disappeared from view. Before they re-appeared a great change had taken place, for Joe Daniels had two lengths the best of it, Hubbard was second, and Bacon's colt had fallen back beaten. Having the race to themselves, the two stable companions galloped leisurely along, Joe Daniels going under the string a winner by half a length, Hubbard beating the Jack Malone colt ten lengths. The time, 3:45¾, was slow, but the winner had never to extend himself in any part of the race. Joe Daniels has thus rivaled his great companion, the 3 year old Lexington, by winning the Belmont, Travers and Kenner Stakes, and adding the Annual Stakes to the list, value $5,103. We give the previous winners of this race:—

THE TWO-YEAR OLD RACE

for a purse of $500, entrance money to the second horse, three quarters of a mile, with an allowance of 7 lbs. for beaten maidens, had ten entries, all of which ran. They were M. A. Littell's Yellow Consuelo; J. Chamberlin's Mary Constant; M. H. Sanford's Miltion; D. D. Withers' imp. Marsyas colt. F. Morris' Eclipse colt out of Etiquette; L. Jerome's Lexington colt out of Kitty Clark, and J. Pennock's Wizard colt, out of Rebecca P. Price. Lilliella's entry, owing to his having won the two-year old Nursery Stakes with Wildlife on the first day, was made the favorite, as it was reported that Mr. Sanford would not start Miltion, Morris' colt being next in demand. The pools sold as under:—

Littell	$400	$710	$300	$370	$760	$410
Morris	160	140	145	200	265	215
Merodac	60	135	100	90	130	170
Milton	60	300	200	155	140	180
Pennock	85	125	95	100	110	60
Field	100	110	200	305	300	155
Totals	$970	$2,020	$1,045	$1,320	$1,705	$1,370

Before the start was effected Pennock's colt broke away, overpowered his jockey, and ran a mile and a half before he could be stopped, which quite extinguished his chance. When the flag fell Mary Constant jumped off in front, followed by Fellowcraft and Wizard, abreast. The Nurse, fourth, Morris' next, Meromac sixth, Merodac, Withers and Pennock next, and Milton last, the latter not getting off until the others had run some distance. After rounding the hill, and coming in sight, Wizard was seen in possession of the lead, Mary Constant next, Fellowcraft third and Fellowcraft fourth. Wizard at every stride kept widening the gap between himself and his followers, who were headed by The Nurse and Merodac, both of whom had passed Mary Constant, when in live the pace. At the furlong pole, Wizard, who ran very green, swerved right across the course, but he was too far ahead to interfere with the horses behind him, and McLaughlin straightened him with strong strokes of the whip, he ran on and won by a length and a half. The Nurse was second and Merodac third; Fellowcraft, Marsyas' colt, Mary Constant, Morris' colt, Jerome's colt, Milton and Pennock's colt finishing in the order named. A complaint was lodged with the judges that Wizard, by swerving, had interfered with the stride of The Nurse, but it was overruled. Time, 1:18¾. The winner was trained by Charles Lloyd, and is a handsome, good looking colt by Concord, a son of Lexington; he is in all the principal three-year old stakes next season. Summary:—

THE GRAND NATIONAL HANDICAP,

a sweepstakes of $100 each, half forfeit, with $1,000 added by the club, of which $200 was to the second horse, 150 was to the third, and four starters out of the ten horses entered and six that accepted. These were Freakness, 118 lbs.; Tubman, 108 lbs.; Defender, 107 lbs., and John Merryman, 100 lbs. The betting was as under:—

Tubman	$1,800	$2,250	$1,350	$1,800	$1,300
Defender	380	710	430	425	340
Freakness	420	875	510	440	360
Merryman	400	325	310	420	300

John Merryman cut out the work at a lively pace when the flag fell, with Defender second, Tubman next and Freakness last. Passing the judges' stand the first time, Merryman led by lengths, with Defender as far before Tubman; the same distance separating the latter from Freakness. They ran without change of position into the home-stretch, where both Defender and Tubman passed John Merryman, the former leading Tubman a length at the string. Skirting the hill, Freakness took third place, and as they came in view again he had become second to Tubman, the race being virtually left to the pair. Freakness waited with Freakness to the distance, when he came with a tremendous rush, and was only beaten by a neck on the post, although Rice never had to move on Tubman to win. Time, 4:10¾. One of the stakes was lost.

THE FOURTH RACE

was a dash of a mile and three-quarters for a purse of $600; the winner to be claimed for $1,500; if entered not to be claimed, to carry five pounds extra; and mile and three-quarters. D. Withers' imp. Marsyas colt, by Australian, dam Miss Princess, by Yorkshire, John Merryman, Bonnie Ryder and Hampton. Sue Ryder at first had the call, but the betting changed and Winesap became favorite, as will be seen from the subjoined pools:—

Sue Ryder	$400	$1,000	$1,000	$ 700	$200
Winesap	145	415	1,025	1,100	300

Merryman	30	15	100	70	40
Totals	$635	$1,555	$2,295	$2,100	$600

Hampton and Merryman cut out the work fast nearly three quarters of a mile, when Winesap passed them both, and made the running until they reached the club-house bluff, where Sue Ryder challenged and passed her, and coming away, won easily by six lengths, Winesap beating John Merryman twenty lengths. Time, 3:49¾.

SAME DAY.—Purse $600; entrance money to second horse; the winner to be claimed for $1,500; if entered not to be claimed, to carry seven pounds extra; and mile and three-quarters.

THE MILE DASH.

For a purse of $600, with allowances for maidens, if three years old, 85 lbs.; if four, 71 lbs.; if five or older, 100 lbs.; beaten maidens, Mineral, Mineral, Hyacinth, Sunshine, Orphan, Jennie Patterson and Mike. They paid in pools as under:—

Orphan	$700	$1,200	$400	$400	$310
Pride	200	150	100	120	120
Jennie Patterson	120	100

Frank Hampton	120	100
Field	100	100
Totals	$1,420	$1,850	$700	$720	$575

Before the start Pride, Hyacinth and Pelham carried their full weight; the others all received the maiden allowance for the year having won a race. When the flag fell, Eastern Star, Mike and Jennie Patterson went off first, Orphan being fourth. They ran without change of position to the head of the stretch, where Orphan got to the front, and Gordon took second place. On re-appearing they were still running in the same order, but Eastern Star fell back beaten on the lower stretch, resigning the lead to Pelham, who held it into the home-stretch. Half way up, Orphan and Mike challenged her right and left, and after a brief but gallant struggle, Orphan won cleverly by a length; Pelham second, Mike third and Frank Hampton fourth. Time, 1:43.

SAME DAY.—PURSE RACE.—Purse $600, for all ages; 5 per cent. entrance to go to the second horse; maidens allowed 5 lbs.; if sire, 7 lbs.; if dam, 12 lbs.; if sire and upwards, 12lbs.; a dash of a mile.

THE SECOND RACE.

for a purse of $700, with allowances in weight for maidens and penalties for winners, two miles and one eighth, had four starters —Gao, Cadence, Arizona and Frank Hampton. Betting was very heavy, and Arizona, on the strength of having beat Tubman and King Henry at Saratoga, was made a hot favorite at the subjoined rates:—

Arizona	$1,800	$1,000	$1,000	$800
Frank Hampton	610	740	600	170
Gao	360	700	230	150
Cadence	320	380	225	100
Totals	$3,040	$2,820	$1,855	$900

Cadence was first off when the flag fell, followed by Arizona and Gao, Frank Hampton last. Gao sulked after going a hundred yards, and would not run, and his rider pulled him up after going a mile and a quarter. Arizona and Cadence ran lapped until reaching the distance stand, when the latter fell back beaten, and Frank Hampton took his place. The latter waited until the half mile pole was passed, when he went up and challenged Arizona, and her beat him a few strides, and he hoped home an easy winner by six lengths, Cadence a bad third. Time, 3:37. Summary:—

SAME DAY.—Purse $700; entrance money to second horse; maidens allowed, if three years old, 5lbs.; if four, 7lbs.; if five or upwards, 12lbs. Winners of a weight for-age race of the value of $1,000 to carry 5lbs.; of the value of $2,000, 7lbs., and of the value of $3,000, 10lbs. extra. Two miles and an eighth.

THE HANDICAP SWEEPSTAKES

of $50 each, half forfeit, added to a sweepstakes of the value of $200, given by Richard Schell, Esq.; members of the club to ride, one mile and an eighth, had three entries—Lochiel, 140lbs.; Lord Byron, 140lbs., and Vim, 120lbs. The owners of Lochiel were dissatisfied at the heavy weight placed on their horse, and refused to start him, and his withdrawal made Lord Byron a hot favorite, the betting being $200 to $60 on him. He made the running from start to finish with a strong lead, and won easily by four lengths in 2:06¾. The cup is an elegant specimen of the art of the silversmith. It is urn shaped in form, about ten inches in height and the same in diameter, with a figure of a jockey, in costume, in solid silver on the top. The winner, Mr. Purdy, is a grandson of the famous Samuel Purdy, who rode Eclipse in his great race against Henry on the Union Course, L. I., in 1823. Summary:—

SAME DAY.—Handicap stakes of $50 each, half forfeit, added to a cup of the value of $200, given by Richard Schell; members of the club to ride; one mile and an eighth.

Time, 2:06¾.

THE FOURTH RACE

was a dash of one mile and three-quarters for a purse of $600, for which the entries were Harry Bassett, Mary Louise, Wheatley and Albuera. The object in starting Harry Bassett was to run him into condition for his approaching four mile race with Monarchist, as well as pay his training expenses by picking up the $600 for the winner. But all pools were sold without him, as his victory was regarded as a moral certainty. With him left out, pools sold as under:—

Mary Louise	$250	$650	$1,500	$1,400	$850
Albuera	50	400	700	600	200
Wheatley	50	100	305	170	270
Totals	$350	$1,150	$2,505	$2,200	$870

Harry Bassett took the lead, with Albuera second, and Mary Louise last, the latter quickly gave Wheatley and Albuera the go by, and became Bassett's attendant two lengths behind. Entering the home-stretch, Mary Louise ran up to Bassett, and they raced together to near the stand, where the great chestnut, who was running under a steady pull, drew away, was never again approached, and won "hands down" by two lengths in 3:44¾. The interest of the race was centred in the contest for second money, and it seemed a certainty for Mary Louise after going a mile and a quarter; but her rider, after racing with Bassett until he had almost pumped her out, pulled her back with such force that both Wheatley and Albuera passed her, and although her jockey set her going again on the home-stretch, she could never overtake Albuera, who took second money by a length. Summary:—

Introductory Overture.

MONDAY, Oct. 14, 1872.

What a pleasant relief it must be to the public to peruse the CLIPPER after a week wasted in reading political leaders in the daily papers, and vainly endeavoring to make something out of the columns and embankments of matter intended to mystify the reader in his desire to get at the result of the scrutiny. It is just like toasting on roast duck and turkey, and broiled chicken and things, after famishing on second hand hash, totally uncalled for potato soup, and unventilated Irish stew. And it is greatly feared that the dailies do not mean to show any quarter to their patrons for some time to come; for another month at least are they doomed to wade through this detestable rule and figure work, and rack their brains in futile attempts to cypher out "who's it." And were it not for the CLIPPER, with its innocent gossip, lively little bits of jocularity, and items of news from all parts of the world, we don't know what would become of a too-confiding people. [Perhaps this puff for the CLIPPER is about as much as our dear friends will stand, so we desist.—ED.]....We dropped into a restaurant near Booth's Theatre, last Friday, to enjoy a plate of our favorite fish; but, like most of the denizens of that neighborhood, the waiter had caught the dramatic infection, and loudly answered, "Arrah, no porgy!" This was something like "something familiar" we heard when the Bouncicaults were here before. "Jessie Brown" was being quoted, two lovers, more interested in themselves than in the play, didn't precisely understand Jessie when she exclaimed "Dinna ye hear the slogan?" "What's that she says?" asked the female lover. "The gal, d'ye mane?" "Aye." "Ah, she was spakin to the navgur cook—she said, Dinnah, dowy'e hear the slopmail?"......"Our Jim" is off duty again—ill, according to his own report—was locked out one night last week, and had to sleep in the city hall park, and this, he asserts, gave him "the new moon-ia."..... If Horace Greeley is not mistaken in his "Farmer's Own Book," this is the proper season to set out your turnip tops, and get your jars ready for canning your pigs are also liable to be killed after the 31st inst., and may be shot without license. We don't endorse all that our friend Horace says about such matters, but the above we know to be correct,.....Manager Daly must be getting rich, since, in addition to his great display of "Diamonds," alluded to in our last, we now find that he keeps his own Brougham..... Actors are but human, after all, and may just as well get indisposed as other people. Billy Tompkins had to put on a substitute the other night, because, as his friend said, "he had the chills awful; could'nt hold still for his life." This was a base lie, and an imposition on a worthy manager, for we saw Billy Tompkins at that time, in Cap. Faggin's saloon, as well and hearty as ever he was in his life, and the only evil effects of this concerned him in his shaking for drinks!.....It is said that Maretzek's orchestra and chorus are becoming more reconciled to each other, their bar practice being separated only by a very short measure. Now, we don't want any old joker to assert, from this, that they get stave-in' tipsy, not a bit of it; don't get such a construction in your head—what we mean to say is, that the orchestra doesn't get through with their score a great while before the chorus reaches the last note.....Talking about lectures, a minister in Pennsylvania has just discovered that that sort of thing pays better than preaching, so he has got up a lecture called "The Devil's Rocking Chair," and with it he is doing right well, as the people will go and listen about it. We like to hear ministers change their subject once in a while..... It is said that some well-meaning people in Boston are getting up a benefit for Gilmore, whose latest speculation entitled such loss upon him. The benefit is to take the shape of a ball. We thought that the jubilee was band enough for Boston.....Stage managers have a good deal of trouble, and have to be sassy at times. We have been induced to give publicity to the following complaint from one of 'em, who has since been sent to the lunatic asylum for his rashness in writing such stuff. Just read it:—

THE STAGE MANAGER HAS A SAY.

If it isn't hard I'll be hanged,
And altogether too bad,
To all these cares on one's shoulders,
It's enough to drive one mad;
This two month we've been preparing
A new sensation play,
The task was a thankless one at best
And prodigious the whole outlay;
A dozen new actors I hired
With a brilliant display of legs,
And at the bright prospect just looming before us
We were all as merry as eggs;
When strolling down town one morning,
Just after lunching on grouse,
I saw the same thing on a rival's posters
In letters as big as a house.
There Stradlee, the "imminent" actor,
Who won't deliver a line
Unless two thirds of the receipts I give him,
I'd thrash that cuss in a minute,
And Daddies another "big Injun."
Though he is somewhat of a flunk,
And if he don't like the bar-hoss cast for
Goes and gets monstrous drunk.
They're half of 'em late at rehearsal,
And some of 'em quarrel like cats,
And though I can't swear on the whole when I please to,
I don't like these family spats.
I took a great shine to a dancer,
And ladled out plenty of tin
To teach her her art, when, one beautiful morning,
She eloped with my own harlequin.
The music is always "stricken;"
If I play a fine piece it rains,
And between the delicate nymphs of the ballet
The direst discord maintains.
Some sixty new plays I'm requested
To read at one interview;
I'm sure to be thoroughly bossed if I don't,
And the plays will be damned if I do.
O, would I might dwell in some Paradise Isle,
Where critics and dailies are unknown;
I'd forswear "Fawns" and "Crooks," burn my blotted
And heretofter I'd "go it alone." Stage books,
.....Stanley, who resuscitated the deceased Livingstone, is to be exhibited in this country the coming winter. If Stanley could only induce Livingstone to go snacks with him, and show up as the resurrected dead man, while Stanley gave a description of how it was done, the two might make a really novel side show. Without Livingstone, however, what will the show be?..... The Saloon who appeared at the sacred concert last night at the Grand Opera House, must not be confounded with the original Sikesy of "take the butt" renown, even though the former does "blow his own trumpet."..... "Our Jim" is always putting his foot in it. Yesterday he was knocked down and fearfully mangled because he innocently stated, as a bit of news, in an English chop house, that another English Fraud had came over here to lecture. The ruthless youth had reference to the great historian, Froude, and his foreign assailants misunderstood him. These assaults on the freedom of the press are becoming entirely too common.....It is getting rather too cold for mosquitoes and circuses, and both are alike bringing to an end their summer 'saults. Besides, it is time to wind-up the circus canvas while the political canvass is attracting such intent attention.....An insane correspondent who has seen "Le Roi Carotte," and got lost in the labyrinth of names with which the thing is loaded, remarks concerning some of the performers and characters that it is Strange that with a Hows'n on the stage, one Hersee got Claude in a Wood, which made the friends of the former Cross, and led to a number of serious Peakes. Mr. Daly, though, let Hersee that he knows how to Makay while the sun shines, for his Heade is Golden with the light of success, and it is plain that Enos how to improve his opportunities. This crazy correspondent further asserts that Robson's acting is only Truck, while Henri Lauri—brother to Annie Lauri—plays his Drum to admiration, and may defy any one to beat him. The Kaffres, of course, are well filled, nightly, seeing that Cross and Ella Dietz stick to their Schoppe, and mind their little biz; Norwood Manager Daly's Stuart like to Ketchum off the Track, even though they might have a Brougham handy to help them over Grudge and things. This crazy man also intimates that a funny Chap-man knows how to play Policeman as well as any of Superintendent Kelso's regulars; and Miss Predigan, he says, who is Queen of the Bees, is letter perfect. He has a whole mess of other stuff of this sort, but we cannot permit him to trifle with our readers any longer.....To what base uses may we come at last, as Cæsar's former might have said when he engaged to sing at a Broadway beer garden. And see, too, what the great Cardiff Giant has come to. After being lectured upon by the London Geographical and Zoological Society, experimented upon by the American Association of Scientists, exhibited here, there and everywhere as a petrified gisant, and tossed about and abused like a presidential candidate, the climax of all indignities has been reached by making him do duty as a gate post over in Jersey. It is no wonder people say that republics are ungrateful. .....A party of live Indians, headed by Hole-in-his Head, or Spotted Tail, we forget which, recently visited Wood's Museum to see the other curiosities, smoke a pipe a piece, and receive presents from their white friends. Among those who "took in" the Indians as they "went through" the halls of the Museum, and sought the notice of the noble red man, were several of the members of Mr. Wood's company, including Jimmy McFadden, President of the Supes' Society. Seeing that everybody was giving the Indians something, and having nary a red himself, Jimmy felt sad and downhearted, and "felt to down his sorrows in the flowing bowl;" but nothing seemed to give him comfort, because he hadn't nothin' to give the poor injuns. We looked at Jimmy in his distress, and sympathised with him, but having spent our last half dollar to see a base ball match, it pained us to think that we could'nt assist him, ourself, but we told him where we thought he could borrow a quarter or two; but it was just like throwing pearls before swine to attempt to assuage Jimmy's grief. All of a sudden he brightened up, like he had drawn first prize in Gov. Bramlette's Kentucky lottery, and directing his footsteps to the sons of the wildwood, he singled out Hole in his Head, and handed him a pot of pomatum, or hog fat, which he had that morning bought for his own use at night, when his supe society gathered round him at the festive board, as it were. Hole in his Head accepted the hog fat with a sympathetic grunt, and these two leaders of society slay saluted for the nonce, as Miss Braddon says in her books. In a few moments the nobleman of the forest, whose eyes are like the lynxes, sought out James McFadden, eyed him with the tenderest expression you ever saw emanate from a human being, and plunging his red right hand cautiously beneath his dirty old blanket, drew forth the pomatum and promptly forgot all about Jimmy here.—Ed.] The weak-minded Indian had eaten Jimmy's hair grease, and, like the much abused Oliver Twist you have read about, wanted more. It is with pride and truth we can exclaim that we congratulate ourself on not being about when noble red men were first invented. Talking about presents, and such nonsense, calls for your consideration something that we have been trying to force out for more than three months. It is

A POETIC BOUQUET,

CULLED FROM THEATRICAL PARTERRES.

We lips of work, for rest we pine,
And sadly need a little air:
Then as a means to pass the time,
Let's wander in the gay parterre,
Where flowers of each and all hues are seen,
Not fashion's beauties, but house bred,
But queens of Nature's realm, we ween.
By Nature's own hand nurtured.
And as the rage it has become
With fav'rite flowers to assort
The charms that strike admirers dumb,
Let's range in there our forte chart.

ROSE COGHLAN (THE VIOLET).

As newest come of all the gems,
Rose Coghlan heads the teeming list,
Sweet flow'r from England's sunny isles.
By us made only to be kissed;
Modest and pure and graceful too,
Of public gaze as half afraid,
Well filling her allotted sphere,
With violets see our Rose arrayed.

ONES ETHEL (THE LILY OF THE VALLEY).

Daughter of all the Muses, here,
In robes of purest whiteness set,
Tuful rest of the flowers of the year,
We greet thee here the drama's pet.
With all diviniest grace crown'd,
Bewitching soft nothings to the wind,
A precious tome in mosses bound,
As fair in figure as in mind,
With lillies be her lot assigned.

JENNIE ANDOS (THE ROSE).

As, last night, the other night
At Wood's Museum from a stall,
Arch Jennie, charmingly bedight,
In cupid's witcheries, wings and all,
Bounded upon the mimic stage,
A sight for eyes to feast upon.
In her bright cheeks, not rouged of course,
We saw the nicest Nature'd done.
In those rips cheeks and burning lips
We recognized the sign of love,
And longed to take a few sweet sips.

PAULINE MARKHAM (THE PEONY).

The gorgeous flower that courts the sun,
And with a seeming sense of right,
Flaunts to the breeze its flaming charms.
Thus even the true blush rose more bright,
We see, when Pauline appears arrayed
Shall in this tribute nambered be,
And fairer still Pauline be found
Than the resplendent peony.

LISA WEBER—(DAISIE ROSE).

Lithe, buxom elf with graces crowned,
Nymph of the laughing, coaxing eye,
Coming before us with a bound,
Bright as a fairy and as spry
As the gazelle, that scarce can vie
With tiny light'ened, and full of fun
As mischief's elves are known to be.
The crown thou wears 'tis fairly won.
In this bouquet assume the place,
An damask, typical of grace.

AGNES HERBERTON—(HELIOTROPE).

A second Agnes craves regard,
One whose charms time has not marred,
Beaming upon us from the mass
Of dainty flowers with steady ray.
The saucy sprites of song and dance
Should not monopolize our lance,
And Heliotrope shall remember that she knows,
For that more modestly it glows!

BELLE HOWITT—(LILAC).

Rosy cheek and winning face,
Merry as the birds of spring,
Melting, gentle, tender, true,
Wonder not we give to you
Place in our floral offering.

LYDIA THOMPSON—(STRAWBERRY).

The Rose of Flowers, in language,
By this doth symbolize perfection,
The sentiment the public share,
And with united voice declare
Miss Thompson their choice selection.

ELISA WEATHERSBY—(RANUNCULUS).

And here, but neither last nor least,
Hedged in a galaxy of wit,
Blushing in beauty perpetual feet,
Gazing at whom men nightly sit,
Loth to depart and break the spell
That's captured by the curtain bell
We take this chance to finish the group
Of flowers that are the last to droop.

EN LO ORNES.

Come Jennings, as the ivy framed,
And Clara Morris, mignonette,
The Wood shall honeysuckle be,
And Davenport as daisy set.
Dunning, Morant, and sweet Jewett,
With Josephine shall cut sutton to forget;
And if enough don't figure here,
You'll name them for yourself, that's clear.

City Summary.

ONE OF THE BEST PROGRAMMES ever offered in the city by Tony Pastor has been presented since our last report, and every one in the bill is worthy of special notice. Valnie, the only fresh appearance, sang "Killarney" in a manner that denoted a good knowledge of music. She has a pleasing face, a well modulated voice, was costumed with much taste, and, although laboring slightly under nervousness, bids fair to achieve success as a serio-comic vocalist. Ellen Mason, most comically made up, sang a budget of chit-chat that could appeared to better advantage than we have hitherto seen him. Harrigan and Hart, in a new and original character duet, entitled "Sweet Slumbers," added to their already excellent reputation. Both Tony Pastor and Miss Jennie Engel sang a fresh selection of songs, which were received with favor, and later in the evening appeared in character in the Circus Circus. Lotty, the eccentricities of matrimonial life and the sweet bliss of "making up again." The Misses Marie and Amelia Gorenflo and Malinda Nagle danced a pas de trois, which awakened the applause of the audience. Gus Williams, in his Dutch character songs, has deservedly become a great favorite, being nightly encored some five or six times. His songs are fresh, and the introduced dialogue sparkles with original wit, while he gives evidence of the possession of considerable histrionic ability. The dancing of Johnny Manning, also the banjo playing and witticisms of Billy Carter, deserve creditable mention. The attendance was excellent.

C. HARRY FRANCK commenced an engagement at the Bowery Theatre on Monday evening, Oct. 7th, when he was announced to perform the four leading characters in a sensational drama, in a prologue and four acts, entitled "Cagliostro; or, the Scarlet Demon." The drama is founded upon supposed incidents in the career of Joseph Balsamo, who was born at Palermo in 1745. He assumed the name of Count Alexander Cagliostro; his whole life was a series of astonishing cheats, mummeries and impostures, and it is recorded of him that "his ingenuity in every species of fiction and deceit exceeds all that has been recorded in the annals of ancient or modern roguery." For some enormities in Rome he was committed to the castle of St. Angelo, in which he died toward the end of 1794. Much of the language of the drama is above that usually found in those of the modern sensational school, yet the incidents are unskillfully grouped, and as a whole, it may be called sketchy. Mr. Franck is evidently a novice, with but little histrionic ability, and speaks his lines in a though unconscious of their meaning. His voice is at times effeminate, which would have a tendency to prevent future success in the impersonation of such roles to which he evidently aspires. His costumes were rich and elegant, though by no means correct, and he seems to evince a feminine taste in the gaudy decorations of his person, while the scenes in the chief role, it would do disguise his voice and idiosyncracies in the assumption of the various roles. Mr. Franck has much to learn of dramatic art ere he can successfully hold the position he seeks. It is possible that with severe study and practice in a good school he might become a fair actor, but, we think, nothing more. As the other characters in the drama were made subservient to the chief role, it would be unfair to say more than that all concerned labored conscientiously to enhance the success of the performance as well as the sketchy characters assigned would permit. The drama was acted during the week, preceded by a farce called "Mr Sarah Tibbs" on the first five nights, and supplemented by "Yankee Jack" on Saturday. Although the attendance was large on Monday evening, it fell off afterward. It was noticeable that during the time that Mr. Franck was speaking the audience became very restless and uneasy. Miss Kate Fisher commences an engagement this evening, Oct. 14th, acting in "Marjorie."

MR. JOS. C. WALLACK, manager of the Academy of Music in Milwaukee, Wis., was in the city the past week, securing musical and other talent for his beautiful establishment "out west."

THE ELKS' BENEFIT at the Academy of Music on Thursday afternoon, Oct. 10th, did not prove as successful as those of previous years. Possibly the annual inspection and review of the militia of the city by Gov. Hoffman may have interfered with the attendance. The performances were somewhat monotonous, being given entirely by the male sex. Signs of internal dissension are visible in the order, which, if not speedily averted, may work its disorganization. We are credibly informed that many prominent dramatic artists, both male and female, would willingly have given their services on the occasion of the benefit, but such offer was received with apathy. Every member of the order should remember that such performances are not given for the personal aggrandizement of any performer, but to add money to the treasury, and thereby increase their facilities for relieving the distresses of unfortunate brothers. We are pained to hear that any dissension has arisen, and trust that all petty differences of opinion will be reconciled, so that the order, which has already been productive of great good, may continue to increase in usefulness.

RUBENSTEIN made his last appearance in New York at a matinee performance at Steinway Hall on Oct. 12th, and went thence to Boston, Mass.

BLIND TOM performed at Harlem Oct. 12th.

THE LAST REPRESENTATIONS of "Diamonds" are now being given at the Fifth Avenue Theatre. After the withdrawal of a few representations of some of the old standard comedies will be given, and probably the next novelty will be a comedy from the pen of Bret Harte.

THE PUBLIC SEEM TO DEMAND that the excellent impersonations of the chief roles in "Arrah-na-Pogue," by Mr. and Mrs. Boucicault and Shiel Barry, shall be continued at Booth's Theatre, for by their liberal attendance since our last report they have signified such a desire.

THE AVENUE ATHENÆUM there were no fresh appearances during the week just closed. Among the notable features of the programme may be mentioned the excellent performances of Courtright and Gilbert, who closed on Oct. 12th; Campbell's songs, with banjo obligato; J. C. Stewart's sketches, and Ricardo's burlesque female impersonations. The average attendance has been good.

THE AFTERNOON has continued large at Bryant's Minstrels. Leon appeared in a fresh selection of his specialties, including Brockway's last song, "Twilight in the Park," "Kitty from Cork" and a "Cottage Dance," all of which, as well as his interpolated dialogue, were enthusiastically received. He has created a profound sensation among the lady patrons, who attend the performances with the keenest interest. Dave Reed's act, called "The Drum Major," was one of the novelties of the second part.

MISS OLIVE LOGAN is to deliver her new lecture on "Successful People" at Steinway Hall, on Friday evening, Oct. 18th, for the first time on any rostrum.

W. S. ANDREWS, who will be remembered as an excellent actor when performing some years since at the Winter Garden, in this city, delivered a lecture on "Dialect Humor" before an audience of invited guests, at Weber's piano rooms, on the 8th inst. It is full of wit and humor, and Mr. Andrews found his stage experience of great service in the delivery of it.

THE AUDIENCES that congregate at the Union Square Theatre warrant the retention of "Agnes" on the bills, and that comedy will probably continue the attraction for some time to come.

IMPROVED ATTENDANCE may be recorded at the second Sunday evening concert at the Grand Opera House on Oct. 13th. The artists were Signors Moriami, baritone; Abrugnedo, tenor; Miss Rose Hersee and Mme. Levielli, sopranos; Mlle. Sanz, contralto; Herr Frederick Sachse, trumpeter, and eight "young ladies of society," pianists. Among the amusing numbers may be mentioned "Little Birds," sung by Miss Rose Hersee with flute obligato by Mr. Tiedier, which was rapturously encored. One great charm about Miss Hersee's vocal efforts, in addition to correctness of tune, purity and strength of tone, is the distinct enunciation of the words, each one of which may be clearly understood in the most remote part of the house. Signor Foench, and J. A. Palmer, which was enthusiastically applauded. The company is an excellent one, and embraces among its vocal and instrumental corps some of the best performers who have ever appeared upon the minstrel stage, and consequently their average business is good.

OCT. 7.—MR. BARNUM, dramatic agent. The Broadway, with sixteen ballet ladies; has a dramatization of "Fay," by C. W. Tayleure, for sale, and is prepared to negotiate engagements for Augusta L. Dargon, with the society drama, "Unmasked;" Ettie Henderson, for the production of "Far West;" M'lle Celito, danseuse; Patti Rosa, vocalist; J. Holmes Grover, for star engagements; Eliza Logan, leading business, and Maywood and Evans, acrobatic song and dance men. For particulars read the advertisements.

To Managers, Agents, Doorkeepers and Others.

To every authorized correspondent of the NEW YORK CLIPPER we have issued a card of a LIGHT YELLOW COLOR, with an engraving of the CLIPPER building on one side, and on the other the name of the correspondent, &c., signed by the proprietor of the paper, with the stamp of the office and date of Sept. 1st, 1872, affixed thereunto, each card running for six months. No person is authorized to use any other card, and all showmen are requested not to recognize or extend favors to any person unless he can produce a card like the above. During the past season many managers were defrauded and imposed upon by persons presenting an ordinary visiting card, bearing, in addition to their names, the words "Regularly authorized correspondent of the NEW YORK CLIPPER," and gave as an excuse for so doing that they had left their regular card at home. Our correspondents are requested never to use such cards, never to ask favors without showing their regular cards, and managers will save themselves from being imposed upon by demanding, at all times, the regular card. All cards of other colors previously issued are hereby revoked. Correspondents are requested to make their favors as brief as possible, as we have not space for voluminous reports. Parties applying for the position of correspondent are respectfully requested to consider silence a negative.

MISS KATE FRASER, vocalist and soubrette, has been engaged for Mrs. James A. Oates' Comic Opera Company. At the conclusion of her engagement Miss Frazer intends going to Italy, where she will remain some two years, to complete her musical studies, and then return and appear in musical drama.

FROM ST. LOUIS, MO., our regular correspondent, dating his letter Oct. 11th, reports as follows:—"The fair has brought thousands to our city and consequently to our theatres. At De Bar's Joe Murphy opened in 'Help' which was continued through the week to excellent business. Of Mr. Murphy's performances we have hitherto written; the support was pleasingly rendered. Mr. Murphy remains one week longer and will produce next week his new sensational drama entitled 'Maum Cre'...At the Olympic Chas. Pope has been acting Snorkey during the week in 'Under the Gaslight,' which remains the bill through the fair. The business has been exceptionably good. On the 14th Miss Jane Coombs will appear.....At the Grand Opera House 'Ixion' and 'Bad Bicker' have been given during the week, the only mentionable addition to the present attraction being a Japanese wire walker, who walks up a tight-drawn wire at an incline of about forty-five degrees, and when near the top slides backwards to the bottom. Mose Piske, Harry Allen and Louise Arnot have established themselves as immense favorites, and will be missed at the close of their engagements here, unless retained, as is probable, by the management, as regular members of the theatre. The Chapmans will bring out their Sleeping Beauty' on the 14th, and with that week their engagement closes."

THE CAROLINE RICHINGS AND C. B. BISHOP COMBINATION, under the management of John T. Ford, is to play at Scranton, Pa., Oct. 14th and 15th; Wilkesbarre, 16th and 17th; Williamsport, 18th and 19th, and Baltimore, Md., one week, commencing the 21st, which will close their present season.

AT THE CHESTNUT STREET THEATRE, Philadelphia, the attraction during the past week has been Augustin Daly's "Article 47," with Miss Clara Morris as the great rival of Janauschek. Miss Morris was admirable in her most repulsive part, and touched up her impersonation with strong shadings of love and passion. Her mad scene is undoubtedly one of the most thrilling pieces of acting ever seen on the stage, and the audience seemed spell bound. Miss Morris has been favored with calls before the curtain. She was well supported by J. H. Stoddart and Mr. and Mrs. Hadaway. The appearance of Mr. Stoddart, as signal for a tremendous ovation, the utterance of her first line, 'I knew I was in the right place,' renewing the applause until the fine old actress was overcome with emotion. The comedy remained on Oct. 14, giving way the following night to 'Speed the Plough,' characters by Marlowe, Williamson, Leman, Wilson, Buckley, Thayer, Leach, Plymeton, Mrs. Judah, Mrs. Saunders, Nellie Cummings and Minnie Wilson. On Monday, 16th, 'Lucretia Borgia' was sung by the Fabbri Opera Combination, to which reference is made in the musical column. The remainder of the week was devoted to performances of 'Speed the Plough.' The attendance each evening being large and brilliant. This evening the production of 'Money' will be distinguished by the first appearances of George Chaplin and Annie Graham, who will impersonate the characters of Alfred Evelyn and Clara Douglas..... The dramatic season closed at the Metropolitan on Sept. 20th. At present the theatre is occupied by the Bianchi Opera Troupe, and it will be December before the regular season commences. It is intended that a new and improved company shall add to the attractions during the forthcoming term."

DOMINICK MURRAY will produce his drama, "Escaped from Sing Sing," in Albany, N. Y., commencing Oct. 21st.

EVA WEST, soubrette, advertises that she can be engaged.

BALLET LADIES and thirty first class coryphees are wanted by Chas. Carle, who advertises.

AT THE MEMPHIS, TENN., THEATRE Albert W. Aiken commenced an engagement of one week, on October 7th, supported by his own "New York stock company." Our correspondent writing on October 8th, says:—"His play is what he calls the great realistic play of 'The Witches of New York,' and was heavily billed, leading the Memphis public to expect something very good, and when it came they were disappointed. The stage is evidently not Mr. Albert W. Aiken's forte. His voice is not pleasing, but grates on the ears of his audiences. He speaks in a high, shrill tone, and the manner of a school boy. In action he is lively and sprightly, and for this reason he gave a very acceptable rendition of the Indian character. He should go and be an Indian and eschew the stage altogether, or else not aspire to anything higher than a second rate stock actor for the present. As an author he is somewhat more successful, for although 'The Witches of New York' is a melodrama abounding in borrowed wit and stale humor, there are many good points about it, and if properly presented would draw well wherever sensation is appreciated. But just here Aiken makes his great mistake. Instead of surrounding himself by a first-class group of talent, who will show his play to advantage, he employs a dozen people with only one or two years' acting time, and calls it 'The Great New York Combination.' With the exception of Mr. J. O. Sefton and Mr. W. H. Meeker, none of the company are worthy of special mention, and neither of them can shone with any special brilliancy. Next (this) week we are to have the 'Black Crook.' .....The Grand Opera House opens on the 14th with Ben De Bar as Falstaff in 'King Henry IV.' supported by Manager Jno. A. Stevens as the Prince of Wales, and the entirely new dramatic company of the St. Charles Theatre, New Orleans, La. The Opera House has been renovated from pit to dome, newly frescoed, and the stage enlarged and raised. The seating capacity (chairs) is now about fifteen hundred people. Mr. Jno. A. Stevens is set down as the proprietor and manager; Ben De Bar, business manager; T. W. Davey, acting stage manager, and W. R. Mumford, treasurer. The house is, I think, to do a very large business during the season."

THE BROOKLYN THEATRE was numerously attended during the week ending Oct. 12th, when "Diamonds" was presented with an excellent cast of characters, the most artistic scenic effect, and elaborate stage appointments. the performance being up to the highest mark of the representations at this theatre. The cast included Mess

tain, amid outbursts of applause. In consequence of the illness of Mr. Norris, who acted Mark Antony on this occasion, Mr. Barrett delivered the funeral oration over the body of Cæsar, which effort was a marvel of dramatic excellence, and which called forth a long continued burst of applause. Mr. Gotthold's Marcus Brutus was exceedingly rendered. His action was strong and dignified, and he delivered his lines with admirable elocutionary effect. He, too, was summoned before the curtain. The Cæsar of Mr. Eilsler was thoroughly satisfactory, being vigorous, easy and natural. Mr. Collings' Cassius was commendable, as was Miss Susie Clark's Portia, and Mary Rickords' Calphurnia. One or two of the minor characters were acceptably given, but the majority of them were badly acted. "Rosedale" will be presented on the 11th for Mr. Barrett's benefit, Mrs. Ella Eilsler appearing on the 14th easton as Rose Leigh. Miss Eldridge opens on the 14th as "Mercy." On the evening of the 16th inst., the audience at Forrest's American Theatre, Philadelphia, during the performance of "Rip Van Winkle," was entertained by having election returns announced from the stage at the earliest possible moment, a telegraphic instrument having been secured by the manager and placed upon the stage that night for the express purpose of imparting to their patronsthe freshest political intelligence."

27,000 PERSONS are said to have witnessed the performances at Forrest's American Theatre, Philadelphia, during the past week. Zanfretta's "Red Gnome" was very successful, and the new faces were well received. This week a number of brilliant additions will be made to the already strong company, including E. D. Davies, the accomplished ventriloquist; Gus. Williams, the popular Dutch comique, and Bobby Newcomb, with his popular song and dance. The new ballet, arranged by G. W. Smith, entitled "Pas de Boutelle," will be given this week. Lucy Adams, Bunn and Curry, Turner and Lester, la petite d'Angelis, continue favorites, while the Romellis are uproariously received each night.

MISS CARLOTTA LECLERCQ, supported by the dramatic company from the Globe Theatre, Boston, Mass., performed at Hartford, Conn., Oct. 9th and 10th.

DRAMATIC AFFAIRS in Washington, D. C., are reviewed as follows by our correspondent, who wrote on Oct. 13th:—

"Mrs. D. P. Bowers, supported by J. G. McCollom and a company of her own, commenced a week's engagement at the National Theatre on Oct. 7th, opening with Halliday's drama of 'Amy Robsart,' and assuming therein the title role. On Tuesday the same bill was presented; on Wednesday she appeared as Lady Isabel in 'East Lynne;' Thursday as Marie Stuart in the tragedy of that name, and on Friday, for her benefit, the play of 'Lady Audley's Secret' was given. The character of Lady Audley, which, we believe, is considered by Mrs. Bowers to be her best character, was one of the occasions assumed with all of that brilliancy and elaborate art which invariably distinguishes her assumption of it. Unnatural and improbable as all of the incidents are, highly wrought as every situation is, her intense and infectious vitality invests the entire play with realism which it would never otherwise possess. Mr. McCollom as Robert Audley was thoroughly satisfactory, and exhibited his usual careful and conscientious acting. H. B. Norman as Sir Michael Audley did not create a very favorable impression. H. W. Mitchell as George Talboys gave a natural representation of a very unnatural character, and Mr. Mitchell presented a excellent make-up as Luke Marks, but failed to give the part the least individuality. Lizzie Rich as Alicia Audley did not seem to possess a proper conception of the character and acted rather tamely. Lizzie Pierson as Phœbe Marks, Miss Bennett as Mrs. Vernon and Mrs. Pennoyer as Mrs. Harrington were very fair in their respective characters. On Saturday evening, for the final appearance of Mrs. Bowers, 'Amy Robsart' was repeated, with Mr. McCollom as Varney, G. W. Mitchell as the Earl of Leicester, and Miss Jennie Parker as Queen Elizabeth. The business of the week was very large and decidedly the best of the present season. The Holman Opera Troupe are announced for Oct. 14."

AT THE PROVIDENCE, R. I., OPERA HOUSE "The Duke's Signal" was played on the 7th, 8th and 9th. On the 10th "As You Like It" was brought out, the principal parts being cast as follows:—Orlando, Mr. Whitby; Jacques, Mr. Tilton; the Duke, Mr. Donaldson; Duke's Frederick, Mr. Hardenbrook; Oliver, Mr. Macomb; Adam, Mr. Rainford; Touchstone, Mr. Sheldon; Rosalind, Miss Isadora Cameron; Celia, Miss Victoria Cameron; Audrey, Miss Nelly Young. This play was repeated on the 11th and at Saturday's matinee, and in the evening were performed "The People's Lawyer" and the "Ocean Child."

.....Harrington's Opera House was occupied on the 10th by Mr. J. J. McCloskey and a company, in the sensational drama of "Pomp."

MISS JEAN HOSMER commenced her second week's engagement at the Richmond, Va., Theatre, on Oct. 7th, as Helen Rolleston, in "Foul Play." Our correspondent, writing on Oct. 12th, says:—"Miss Hosmer, as Helen Rolleston, showed but little conception of the character, but in justice to the lady we would add that it was the dress adopted in her style of acting. In the 4th act, as a castaway, her costume was rather inappropriate, it being more suitable for a drawing room than that of a supposed shipwrecked woman. The scene for the same act resembled a fairy grotto more than a desert island. The Robert Penfold of J. T. Fannin was in the main good, but at times wanting in pathos. The Gen. Rolleston of E. A. Sothern, and the Mrs. Wardour of H. C. Strong, were satisfactory. Jos. Wylie found a good representative in H. Moreland. J. G. Steele, as Arthur Wardlaw, was too tame. Animation is wanting at all times in this gentleman's acting. Miss Allie Sinclair made a good Sarah Wilson, and gave us a fine jig in the second act. The rest of the support did well. The play was not one to be taken off to enable a company advantageously. The settings of the stage, the scenery, &c., reflected both taste and credit on the management. 'Foul Play' was repeated on the 8th and 9th; 'The Woman in White,' the 10th; and for Miss Hosmer's benefit, the 11th, 'No Name.' Miss Hosmer will close on the 12th, with the drama of 'The Poor Girl.' Chanfrau is repeated for the Saturday matinee. Miss May Saville, supported by Vining Bowers, Alice Stanley and E. F. Thorne, will open Monday evening, Oct. 14th, for three nights, with the Irish drama of 'Eileen Oge.' They will be succeeded by Mr. Spalding's company, with Mrs. D. P. Bowers, also for three nights."

THE NEW YORK AND GREAT WESTERN Dramatic Company, under the management of J. W. Blakeney, with Felix A. Vincent as the star, performed at Coshocton, Pa., Oct. 9th.

DOUGHERTY & KOBER'S DRAMATIC CONSTELLATION commenced the fall and winter season at McKeesport, Pa., on Oct. 12th. The company is as follows:—Harry H. Dougherty, John C. Kober, H. C. Bernard, T. J. Rourke, H. D. Kober, C. Seyfert, L. T. Barrett, Chas. Morton, comic vocalist; Master George Dougherty, the Misses Jennie Foster and Maud Atkinson. John C. Mink, business manager; M. Memmons, musical director, and W. C. Stevens, scenery and properties.

OPERA IN SAN FRANCISCO, CAL.—Our correspondent, writing on Oct. 7th, sends the appended report:—

"At the Metropolitan Theatre, the season of Italian opera which was announced to commence on Sept. 30th, was postponed two nights, in order that time might be afforded to beautify the theatre. Upon re-opening on Oct. 2d, 'Il Trovatore,' the initial opera, drew out a crowded audience that was equallygay in aspect as it was cheerful in feeling. An especial interest was lent to the occasion by the debut of Mlle Anna Bonning, formerly a resident of San Francisco, who was represented to have won honors at the La Scala, Milan, and in the opera houses of Berlin, Paris and Vienna. It was with something of a local pride she was welcomed to our stage, and, being the favorite of the evening, it was thought (not without reason) that in this favorite character a conveyance would be found for the suitable expression of her talents. At the beginning her singing exhibited symptoms of embarrassment, the audience, disposed to lenity in its judgment, attributed it to nervousness, and waited patiently for her to warm up, when, it was thought, the merits which were said to have obtained European recognition would surely be displayed. But Mlle Bonning, with all the kindly encouragement received, was unequal to feel or assume any fervor, and the audience, loth to believe it, was finally convinced of the fact that her performance was a failure. It is in power of voice, the essential to success, that Mlle. Bonning is lacking, for, although it may possess sweet tones, and be used with discriminating taste, it is too feeble to meet the rigid demands of the lyric stage. The success of the evening was won by Signor Pietro Baccei as Manrico. He is one of the best tenors that have been heard in California, and to his excellence as a singer he unites the merits of being an impassioned actor, and the possessor a graceful exterior. He almost bore the entire opera upon his shoulders, and with the assistance of Signora Bianchi—excellent as Azucena—brought it to a fair termination. The interest attached to Luna, and Signor Bianchi and Signora Ferrando, was, that upon this occasion, their first appearance was made in America. The second opera night was on the 4th, when 'Lucrezia Borgia' was produced, originally arranged for Lucrezia, withdrew in favor of Mlle. Speranza, who was heard during a late season at Maguire's Opera House. The failure of the first night affected the attendance, but the performance was deemed, on the whole, and had the cause not been known, been selected for the opening, the prospects of the season would have been brighter. On the fifth, extra night, 'Il Trovatore,' with Speranza as Leonora, and Bianchi as Manrico, was repeated to a light audience, and on the 7th the second week will commence with 'Ballo in Maschera.'.....The Fabbri Opera Combination, which was so successful at Maguire's Opera House, have been regularly engaged, and before standing on Sunday's at the California Theatre, but for a few weeks, with the view probably of running opposition to the Metropolitan, they have obtained the use of the theatre for Thursday of each week. Their first appearance was made on the 3d, when the auditorium fairly blazed over with wealth and fashion. 'Lucretia Borgia' was presented, and the heroine being impersonated by Madame Fabbri—who is an intense tragic actress—it passed off swiftly, and a great deal of enthusiasm. Some of the strength of Mme. Fabbri's voice has vanished with time, but experience has mellowed the delicacy and sentiment of her expression, and in such characters as Lucretia, by reason of her peculiar quality, she proves more than acceptable than would a better singer with less histrionic talent. After each act she was called before the curtain. It is possible the rival troupes may consolidate, and it is to be hoped they will, for there are elements in each that would go toward forming a powerful company. Last evening the Fabbri Troupe sang 'The Barber of Seville' to a brilliant audience. The absence of a good tenor was felt, which made those present think of Baccei, of the other troupe."

.....Mr. Peck's series of concerts commence Friday evening, Oct. 25th, and continue on the 28th, 27th and 28th. Mrs. Chas. Moulton, Adelaide Phillips, Anne Mehlig, F. C. Packard (making his first appearance since his return from Europe), M. W. AT SMITH'S OPERA HOUSE, East Saginaw, Mich., the changes for the past week were, J. H. Carle going to the Comique on the 14th, and James Deary goes to Bay City. Fresh appearances:—Lillian Sisters, on the 14th; Lillie Swift, club swinger, and Kearney and Moran, character artists, on the 21st.

MR. AND MRS. CHARLES YOUNG, Lydia Webster, Larry Tooley, Jimmy Quinn and Miss Hannah Birch, were the new faces at Fred. Aims' American Theatre, Pittsburgh, Pa., on the 7th inst., and during the week Mr. and Mrs. Young appeared in lyric dialogue acts, and acquitted themselves creditably, singing tolerably well and receiving the possession of a fair share of dramatic ability. Miss Webster's Indian club exercises met with due approbation, and Larry Tooley's Dutch business is ordinarily clever. Jimmy Quinn's banjoistic manipulations are up to the usual average of merit, and Miss Hannah Birch is a danseuse and comedienne of fair capabilities. On the night of the 6th inst., Manager Aims had wires brought into the theatre, and a telegraph apparatus placed on the stage, which was presided over by competent operators, who regularly received election returns from all parts of the country where elections had been held that day, and as soon as possible the news was announced from the stage to the audience, by a gentleman specially engaged for that purpose. The idea was a good one, and Manager Aims and Stage Manager Fitzsimmons had the satisfaction of seeing a large audience on election night, as the result of their efforts and foresight. Business good. Walters and Morton go to Baltimore this week, and Mulligan and Price to Washington.

AT THE FRONT STREET THEATRE COMIQUE, Baltimore, Md., the fresh arrivals on Oct. 7th were Fanny Fordham, who executed a neat fancy dance; Ionas Laing, a serio-comic vocalist, who dresses handsomely and possesses fair abilities; Billy Barry, who did "The Active Boy," in fine style, and M'lle Marie Zoe, the pantomimic actress. This lady appeared in the military drama of "The French Spy," her admirable efforts meeting with deserved approbation. She was ably supported by G. Fordham and Prof. Chas. Reinhardt deserves credit for the efficiency with which he dispenses the music at this establishment. Business has been good. Messrs. Austin, Hess, Walters and Morton are announced to appear on Oct. 14th.

AT THE BALTIMORE OPERA HOUSE, the additions on Oct. 7th were Ciara May, vocalist, who made quite a hit; Johnny Manning, a daring single trapeze performer, and Aline La Favre, who appeared in "The French Spy," and executed a remarkable broad sword combat. The attendance has been satisfactory. Harry Price, Harry Brown, Claudia Walters and Lizzie Barrett closed Saturday, 12th, and go to the Theatre Comique, Washington, D. C. Annie Hindle, Della Gonzales and Emerson and Granger are underlined.....The new faces at the Odeon Varieties were Ella Hedlin, jigrist, and Josie Harrison, fancy dancer. Dan Howard, the stage manager, had a benefit Friday evening, 11th. The audiences have been generally large. Messrs. St. George and Gibbons closed 12th and go to Mortimer's Varieties, Philadelphia. Dan Howard's engagement terminated at the same time. Jim Flake, Dick Gorman and Laura Graham open on Oct. 14th.

E. D. DAVIES, ventriloquist, who is at present performing at Fox's American Theatre, Philadelphia, is the recipient of flattering testimonials from the managers with whom he has been connected, which are published in another column.

THE ATTENDANCE was good at Shelby's Comique, Buffalo, N. Y., the past week, and although no new faces appeared, a most entertaining programme was displayed. The farce of "Dr. Cureall," though time-worn, was well enacted by the leading members. Robert and Clarisse Hunting evinced their skill on the trapeze in daring feats in mid-air. Charley Worley rendered songs in his usual inimitable style. Miss Clara Butler gave ballads in a pleasing manner. The sketch of "Laughing Gas" was comically produced by Howard Kennedy, Worley and others. The Foy Sisters were well received in their specialties, and Harry Causland gave his musical act with precision and effect. The performance closed with "The Union Scout," being the second week of its production. A valuable acquisition has recently been made to the Comique company in the person of Mr. Harry Butcher, who, though young in years, possesses the talents of a veteran, and is, possibly, destined to fill a high position at no distant day. The Huntings, Charley Howard and Harry Causland come to-night (12th). The "Zigzags" and Mr. Neil Rogers open on the 14th. The season will close on November 2d, and Mr. Shelby will take the company to Syracuse for the opening of his Opera House, in that city, on the 9th. So stated our correspondent under date of Oct. 12th.

SCOTT'S COMBINATION is to perform at Emporium, Pa., Oct. 14th and 15th; Driftwood, 16th and 17th; Renovo, 18th and 19th, and Lock Haven, 21st and 22d.

BUSINESS AT THE GLOBE THEATRE, Chicago, Ill., continues uniformly good. Charles Gardner appeared on the 7th. Dick Carroll and boys closed on the 12th. Billy Carter and Jennie Gilman open on the 14th.....The Roberts' Combination is meeting with ordinarily fair success at Nixon's amphitheatre. The new faces comprise Walter Bray, Jas. Mass, Gussie Crayton, Lizzie Warren and Leona Dare, who does a passable trapeze act, showing more strength than skill. Billy Manning and Billy Pastor are nightly the recipients of numerous encores, and E. M. Hall's banjo solos are well received. Dave Wilson and J. B. Oberlat closed on the 12th. Viola Clifton and the Kinzie sisters commence on the 14th.

THE LESLIES, gymnasts, now at the Grand Opera House, St. Louis, Mo., where they can be addressed, desire engagements.

P. H. SEAMON, ventriloquist, whose address find elsewhere, can be engaged for halls or traveling companies.

CASTELORY, gymnast, at present performing at the Metropolitan Theatre, Indianapolis, Ind., where he can be addressed, is at liberty on Dec. 9th, and for two weeks from Oct. 21st.

C. W. B. advertises six second hand 'magical illusions for sale, cheap.

ODD FELLOWS' HALL, Lynn, Mass., can be rented through C. L. Robinson, whose card is in another column. It is well lighted and heated, and will seat over a thousand persons.

G. W. JESTER, ventriloquist, has vacant dates, and can be addressed as per advertisement.

HUGHEY HAGERTY, Dutch comedian and vocalist, advertises that he can shortly be engaged.

AT THE THEATRE COMIQUE, Washington, D. C., Della Gonzales, vocalist, also Emerson and Granger, Irish performers, joined the company on Oct. 7th, but did not create a very favorable impression. Miss Gonzalez is rather stylish in her manner and dresses moderately well, but her voice is not at all melodious and does not exhibit any cultivation. Emerson and Granger are only fair in their specialties, and their songs, acts, etc., are of a peculiarly ancient character. The excellence of the remainder of the company, however, more than made amends for the imperfections of the new comers. Belle Celeste and C. C. Mathews, who were to have closed on the 5th, were re-engaged, and continued their darling leats on the trapeze, for which they were rapturously applauded. Joe Hindlin, in the character change songs, appeared to great advantage, and met with loudly expressed approbation. Dick Parker's banjo-solo, of which, by the way, the audiences appear never to weary, continued one of the features of the programme. Harry Brown, comic vocalist and mimic; Quilter and Goodrich, double song and dance men; Lizzie Barrett, vocalist; Harry Price, general comedian, and Kate Barrown, danseuse, appear on the 14th. Annie Hindle, Della Gonzales, Emerson and Granger, and Josie Ashton, closed on the 12th, all bound for the Opera House, Baltimore, Md.....The Metropolitan did a fair business during the past week, and presented a good performance. Mlle Eugene, jig dancer; Kate, Laura and Emma Harrison, danseuses, and Ike Richmond, Ethiopian dance man, appeared on the 7th, and were cordially received. Sadie Rogers, although introducing no very novel steps in her jigs, is quite graceful, and what she does, does nicely. The Harrison Sisters are well known here, have many admirers and were considered favorites. Ike Richmond, although apparently something of a novice, deserves considerable praise. His "Essence of Old Virginny" was very clever, and, with care and attention, he bids fair to make an excellent eccentric dancer. John Mulligan and Billy Rice, Ethiopian comedians; Letitia Makenzie, transformation dancer, and Flora Makenzie, danseuse, are billed to appear on the 14th. Kitty Rowell left on the 12th and went to Harrisburg, Pa. Billy Collins closed on the same date, going to Aima' American Theatre, Pittsburgh, Pa. So wrote our correspondent on Oct. 13th.

AT THE ATHENÆUM, Keokuk, Iowa, Dora Antonio, vocalist, closed on Oct. 5th, and May de Forrest supplied her place on the 7th. On the 11th J. C. Murphy was to have taken a benefit, when among the attractions a trial jig was to have been danced by amateurs for a prize—a live hog. Matinees are to be given after Oct. 12th.

AT BROOM'S OPERA HOUSE, Memphis, Tenn., the only new face the past week was Fernando Fleury, an old time favorite, who is very lively in his comic changes, and very pleasing in his vocalisms. Miss Lizzie Lamereaux is in the second week of her engagement, and is very popular in her ballads and character songs. Manager Marsh Adams has a new act called "Old Black Joe at Home," which he will produce next (this) week. Green and Saddler, double song and dance men, close their engagement October 19th, and go hence to Cincinnati, probably to the Race Street Varieties. A number of new stars have been engaged and will appear shortly, among whom are General Grant, Jr., and P. H. Seamon, with the original Peter Honts family..... The Olympic Varieties is doing a big business. The new appearances are the Henrie Family, consisting of Prof. Chas. Henrie and Masters Tommy and Charley, contortionists, gymnasts, and song and dance artists, and Miss Flora, an accomplished and bewitching danseuse. They are very popular here and received a very flattering reception on their first appearance, Oct. 8th. Frank Bennett has made a big hit in his "Drum Major" act; Charley Watson and Miss Lizzie are good in all their acts. Lizzie Whalen is billed for Oct. 14th, and Mons. Reverand Zoe Zeonetti, and Miss Emmazetta for the 21st. So wrote our correspondent on Oct. 8th.

EDW'D. STRAW advertises for a partner to do brother acts on the bar and trapeze.

PEDANTO, antipodean gymnast, who can be addressed as per card elsewhere, is prepared to accept engagements for tight-rope ascensions and gymnastic business.

AT THE BROOKLYN OLYMPIC, this week, Whalley is to be the dramatic star in "Oliver Twist," with Hugh Fay, Sidney Franks, Billy Hart, Gus Wally and Dan Kelly in the variety programme.

AT MORTIMER'S VARIETIES, Philadelphia, this week, Emma Wesner, Mary and Minna, danseuses, are added to the company, St. George and Gibbons sound songs and dances artists, appear. Charlie Fox will make a claim in his Dutch comicalities. Charles Reynolds, Leo Gordon, Mary Fraser, Tommy Jefferson, Joan R. Lane, and G. B. Radcliffe, are as great favorites as ever. A new ballet is announced for this week, entitled "Les Hongrois," in which the Siegels appear.

AT LOONEY'S VARIETIES, St. Louis, Mo., the new arrivals on Oct. 7th were H. A. Gannon, ventriloquist, and Dan Hart, Irish vocalist. The business has been immense. Miss Maude de Lisle and Johnny Reese are announced to appear soon.

MISS ANNIE ADAMS, serio-comic vocalist, who has just concluded an engagement at the Howard Athenæum, Boston, Mass., publishes in another column extracts from the opinions of the press in regard to her performances, which perused.

CINCINNATI VARIETY NEWS, up to the 11th, is furnished thus by our correspondent:—"At the Pacific Garden the new appearances have been Harry Blood, comedian and banjoist; James Dalton, comedian; Pete Grady, gymnast, and Kate Murray, vocalist. Dad Murray closed. The Adelphi Theatre, Vinnie Hayes and Keating remain. Dan Morris, Irish comique, and Josie Morris, danseuse, open Monday. Biz holds up well.....At the Olympic Theatre the new comers for the week have been Nellie Maskell, Clara Stanley, danseuse, and Valentine Love. The latter, with Miss Maskell, does rapid double changes. They have also put on their version of the burning of Chicago, with Love and Keating as Mrs. Gill and the lady Kitty Muldroon, the rest of the characters being taken, for better or worse, by the company, viz., Emma Laporte, Julia Barton, Clara Stanley, Johnny Morton, James Davis, Willie Handley, Charley La Porte, Ed Pleiss and E. Stillette. J. W. Sheppard, song and dance, is underlined for Monday, 14th.....At the Race Street Varieties there have been no changes in the company this week."

FEMALE TALENT of ability is wanted for the Athenæum Theatre, Keokuk, Iowa. See advertisement.

THE ATTRACTIONS at the Howard Athenæum, Boston, during the past week, have been somewhat changed from that of the previous week. D. L. Morris in his sketch of Dutch Justice, Kitty Leroy with her excellent jig dancing, the gymnastic feats of Mdlle. Zitella and the Varella Brothers, Mackin and Wilson in song and dance, Bobby Newcomb, Eugene and Unsworth, all prove as attractive as ever. Mdlle. Lupo appeared in a new and beautifully arranged ballet entitled "Night and Morning," and her costume—white with silver spangles, trimmed with nothing but green leaves, with a head dress also of leaves—was perfectly lovely. Miss Annie Adams made her first appearance in Boston, coming loudly heralded by extracts from New York and London papers. Our correspondent says:—"We must confess to a disappointment in Miss Adams. We fail to see wherein she excels certain American serio-comic singers with less pretentions. Jennie Engel, Lizzie Biddell, for example. She is rather pretty and dresses tastefully, but her voice is somewhat harsh, and not at all toned to the size of the auditorium; her utterance is indistinct, and her smile is not a pleasant one. Why she should get $250 in gold is a mystery. The other new arrival was the charming Lizzie Kelsey, who re-appeared in consequence of the revival of the successful burlesque of 'The Female Forty Thieves.' This is an excellent burlesque, and is even better than when first produced, several new songs and bits of business having been introduced. Adah Richmond was charming as Ganem, and Harry Bloodgood and James Vincent were particularly funny in their double song and dance, making the hit of the piece. Dot Morris, Kitty Leroy, Mdlle. Zitella and the Varella Brothers and Bobby Newcomb closed last night, 12th. To-morrow, 14th, Courtright and Gilbert, in their act 'Big and Little,' J. H. Milburn and Charley Howard commence engagements, and the sensation spectacular burlesque 'King Carrot' will be brought out for the first time in Boston. On Oct. 21st the following people open:—Le Verde Children, dancers and character duettists; Henry Moore, and Kitty Henderson, westerners, who make their first appearance in the east, and who do a duet entitled 'The Emigrants;' Leopold and his pupil Leo, in the 'Luiu Sensation Act.' The dramatic season will commence then with a performance of 'Arrah-na-Pogue,' in which Col. Collins, leading man, and E. Price, juvenile, will appear."

THE NEW APPEARANCES at the Varieties Theatre, Pittsburgh, the past week were E. D. Davies, ventriloquist; Millie Tournour, trapezist; George S. Knight, Dutch comedian, and Tommie and Willie Daly, song and dance artists. Mr. Davies' ventriloquial powers constitutes the conspicuous feature of the programme. While on the stage his auditors were kept in a continual roar of laughter. Miss Tournour's trapeze performances deservedly evoked genuine outbursts of applause. George S. Knight is a Dutch vocalist of average merit. The Daly brothers sing passably well, and, as dancing goes now-a-days, they may be considered experts. They are as good acrobats, contortionists, &c., as other negro dancers. Business, which had previously languished, took a new impetus, and crowded houses are the order of the night. In the minstrel first part the bone and tamborine ends were occupied respectively by Jas. Shay and Sam Cole. Miss Nellie Clifford sang "Little Footsteps" very sweetly, and Belle Ilferd gave "Waiting for Thee" in a pleasing manner. The Celt Walter Melville and son accomplished some fine acrobatic feats, and the entertainment wound up with the farce entitled "Who Died First?" Eva Buckner and Johnny Shay took their departure Oct. 12th. M'lles Rosalie and Aldeanie, danseuses, Miss Lottie Lynn, jig dancer, also Messrs. Frank Bell and Tommy Winnett, Ethiopian comedians, are announced for Oct. 14th.

THE THEATRE COMIQUE, Detroit, Mich., still attracts large houses. On Oct. 7th, Nellie Howard, Sallie Swift, Low and Frank Collins, J. D. Roome and Geo. Wilson made their bow. Agnes Sutherland was also billed, came to rehearsal, but thought appearing twice during the evening's performance was too much for her and consequently withdrew. Nellie Howard executed her jig dance in correct time and neatly. Sallie Swift in her Indian club act was exceedingly fine, and in her banjo solo she displayed considerable skill. The latter is not a success. Low and Frank Collins gave a double song and dance as well as any, but exhibited nothing new or original. Geo. Wilson is immense as an Ethiopian comedian. J. D. Roome, in his banjo solos, evidently took for his model, Harry Stanwood, whose style and originality he closely imitated and pleased the audience. John T. Ivey made a comfortable hit in his trial acts. Tillie Antonio gave a good costume fancy dance. Minnie Gray, Nell Rogers, and Low and Frank Collins close the 12th, going to Pittsburgh, Buffalo and Cleveland respectively. On the 14th, Healy and Conway, double clog, and Eda Saunders are billed. Viola Clifton, who has been sojourning at home this week, opens with N. D. Roberts, Cincinnati, for two weeks. So wrote our correspondent on Oct. 11th.

THE NEW GLOBE VARIETY THEATRE, Troy, N. Y., opened on the 6th to a house crowded in every part. This theatre is neatly fitted up, and has a seating capacity for one thousand people. Messrs. Goss and Gallager are the managers. They give a regular first part entertainment, followed with variety. The company as given daily has been quite large.

ADAM FOREPAUGH'S MUSEUM, MENAGERIE AND CIRCUS exhibited at Paris, Ill., October 11th and Marshall 12th, to immense business, says our occasional correspondent, adding that:—"Nothing like it having ever been known before in that region of the country. At Paris it is said that fully eight thousand people were jammed into the seats, and ever since they have been large. The route ahead, on wheels, is as follows:—Terre Haute, Ind., Oct. 14th; Rockville, 15th; Brazil, 16th; Greencastle, 17th; Danville, 18th; Indianapolis, 19th; Anderson, 21st; Muncie, 22d; Hartford, 23d; Bluffton, 24th; Decatur, 26th; Van Wert, O., 28th. At this place the show leaves the road and travels by rail, the baggage wagons and stock driving overland to Connersville, Ind., where they go into winter quarters. The route by railroad is as follows:—Grentline, O., Oct. 28th; Upper Sandusky, 29th; Mansfield, 30th; Massillon, 31st; Wooster, Nov. 1st; Liberty, Pa., 2d; Johnstown, 4th; Altoona, 5th; Huntingdon, 6th; Harrisburg, 7th; West Philadelphia, 9th, closing a season of thirty-two weeks—the most successful, it is said, that the Forepaugh Show ever had."

OLDER'S MUSEUM, MENAGERIE AND CIRCUS is at Franklin, twenty miles below Indianapolis, Ind., where the wagons are being re-painted. It is said that this show will go south the coming winter, under the name of P. T. Barnum, Mr. Older having secured the use of the name. He has twenty cages, and Mr. C. Crum goes ahead, with Ben Lubbie as agent. The show is being advertised as P. T. Barnum's Museum etc., will probably do a big business during the ninety days of its winter's travels. They make their first stand in East Tennessee.

DAN RICE'S CIRCUS is to exhibit at Cincinnati, O., four days, commencing Oct. 16th, thence to Newport, Ky., 21st, and Covington, 22d.

FIVE MEN, connected with "Old" John Robinson's circus and menagerie, were arrested at Richmond, Va., recently, charged with the robbery and murder of Mr. Davenport, a resident of Charlotte county.

EL NINO EDDIE, tight rope performer, advertises that he has a few open dates during the coming winter, and can be addressed as per his card.

Miscellaneous.

FROM SAN FRANCISCO, CAL., our correspondent, "Sir Toby," sends the following gossip, under date of Sept. 28th:—

"Mrs. Minnie Myrtle Miller, wife of Joaquin Miller, made her debut on the lecture platform at Pacific Hall, Sept. 24th. A fair audience assembled, partly out of curiosity to see the wife of the erratic singer of the Sierras, but more particularly to hear the estimate of him as poet and man, which she promised to make, yet nothing extensive nor aught set down in malice. Mrs. Miller would not be thought a beauty, though her features have an air of refinement, and their expression beams with intelligence. She was plainly dressed, her hair, ornamented with a single flower, fell carelessly upon her shoulders, and her demeanor was equally unassuming. She did not come as an injured woman, laden with domestic wrongs, but as a dispassionate observer who had been supplied with unlimited opportunity to learn the character of the man of whom she was about to speak. Joaquin was credited with undoubted courage and love of adventure; still he was presented in the light of a sick sentimentalist, and the severity of mind and the playful good humor in which Mrs. Miller so viewed him vividly intensified the keenness and shining brightness of her satire. Miller's first idol was Joaquin Murieta, the California Dick Turpin, a ruffian of enormous force and courage, whose picturesque costume and bandit appearance captivated the imagination of the embryo poet. From this outthroat it was that Miller adopted the christian name he is now known by; but in time he tired of Murieta, and took up Lord Byron, when a change came over the spirit of his dream; his affections were transferred and he cultivated all the eccentricities of the great poet with assiduity, not stopping at counterfeiting Byron's natural deformity of lameness. To make Byron his model was esteemed a necessary means to poetic development, and Miller commenced to talk of separating from his wife, merely because his prototype had done so. He disliked to see his wife cast, as the contemplation of it jarred his poetic feelings, and when in company he was wont to say, 'Don't talk, Kittie, say nothing and look pretty.' While showing Joaquin was inclined to cultivate effy affectations, Mrs. Miller was nothing loth to acknowledge his talents, describing with some pains how methodically he prosecuted his studies to master the intricacies of rhyme. The lecture was extremely interesting, the audience quickly perceived its points, although Mrs. Miller did not convey them with the force nor artistic beauty of a mistress of elocution. Her voice, which is hard, lacks variety of tone, and not knowing how to put life to the best use, it falls inconsecutively on the ear. Mrs. Miller intends paying the eastern states a professional visit, but before going will probably repeat the lecture."

CARD TO MANAGERS.
In reply to J. A. Stevens' remarks regarding the Omaha Academy of Music advertisement, I shall merely repeat a few facts, which, by measurement, cannot be disputed, after which I decline further correspondence, as I do not propose entering into controversy with mushroom managers. It is true as stated:—The ACADEMY OF MUSIC is THE ONLY REGULAR THEATRE in Omaha, having an Auditorium arranged with PARQUET, DRESS CIRCLE and GALLERY, large stage, and complete in every detail (which is not the case in any other building in the city); seating capacity, 1,000. As to St. Joseph, Kansas City, &c., I, as the manager for Mr. Raymond, gave concerts a little while since in both cities. The proprietors of the establishments informed me that I could rent their houses any time by giving due notice, that being the same privilege which Mr. Stevens or any other parties had. H. CORRI, Legitimate Manager of 30 years' standing. 29-1t

ABOUT DANCING.
I, the undersigned, have been at work on a queer box, and after much labor and expense, have been successful. The box, 5x7, well polished, contains mechanical movements, with a pair of wooden shoes, three inches long, fixed on top of it, which, on winding up the works by means of a wire attached, will dance 30 steps. We have three kinds:—Clog, Jig, and Song and Dance, and by certain springs the one step may be repeated as often as desired, and fast or slow. The price for the method is $5 each, or the three for $12. Send $1 for Expressage, if not satisfactory, money will be refunded. Address GEO. K. AUSTIN, Maker,
Boston, Mass., P. O.
N. B.—Please state whether Clog, Jig, or Song and Dance is wanted. 29-1t*
